The Scottish Race
 The Scots did not originate in Ireland, but the tribe that supplied the name Scotland did.
 Like all the other inhabitants of Europe, the Scots are a mixed race. When the Roman General Agricola invaded Scotland in 78 A. D. he found tribes with varied dialects, some probably speaking Gaelic and others, Celtic, the speech of the Britons. He called them all Caledonians.
 The Scots came in when Rome withdrew her legions in 410 A. D. They were a tribe from Ireland who conquered a lot of territory and gave the nation its name.

 "Luther Charles, didn't you leave any?"
 "Leave any?" he replied with an innocent expression. "Why this was all there was."
