Said It With Radishes

By JOHN WADE

(Copyright.)

EVEN after Betty Gaynor's uncle died and left her several hundred thousand dollars John Bradley kept right on loving her, although he didn't talk so much about it. How could he expect that Betty, with all sorts of radiant possibilities suddenly opened to her, would still feel the same toward the prosaic life he could offer her as his wife?

John was doing well in his profession. As a matter of fact, he was first getting the name of being one of the finest landscape gardeners in the country. Yet it would be many years before his income would compare with Betty's.
Now, one of Betty's first extravagances—so termed by Miss Deborah Perkins, Betty's middle-aged, thrifty housekeeper—was the purchase of old Caleb Hemingway's place, a rambling, run-down farm of devitalized fields, overgrown woodlots and unkempt meadows. Betty had torn down the house and replaced it with a tapestried brick affair, comfortable and pleasing in appearance. The grounds—well, what more natural than that she should put them into the hands of her old-time friend, with carte blanche to do as he pleased with them?

Frequent consultations with Betty were by no means the least desirable feature of his job, and at times it necessitated all his self-control not to tell her of his love. A certain wisdom in the girl's eyes tempted him. Did she wonder why he was so much more formal than in the old days before her fortune had come between them?

Day by day the impulse strengthened to let her know, in some delicate fashion, that his love for her still existed. He came to ponder the problem almost incessantly, but not until Betty declared she must have a vegetable garden did the answer come.

For some time he had decided what form his message ought to take, but to use for the purpose the conspicuous means of a flower bed would never do. A vegetable garden suggested the solution. He would plant his love in seeds—in some quick growing annual. Radishes, for example.

All but a sunny, inconspicuous little corner he turned over to his assistant, a canny, taciturn old Scotchman named Ferguson. In that little plot he labored carefully, reminding himself that he must urge Betty to take personal supervision of her radish bed. Truly it was a work of love as well as alphabetic art, and on the morning of its completion John rose from his knees with a prayer for the proper amount of sun and rain to produce speedy results.

Now, whether or not John's long hours spent bent over in the sun were the cause, at any rate something went suddenly out of kilter that night in John's well-being. Morning found him calling incoherently and tossing in fever, while two doctors discussed treatments and remedies, and tried not to listen to "Betty! Betty!"

Anxious hours followed, in which Betty shared. Her first thought in the morning was for the latest news of John; her last, a prayer that he would spend a quiet night.
At length John's nurse assumed an unprofessional responsibility. "I think," she said to Betty as she stood at the door answering her inquiries, "that before he will recover some worry must be removed from his mind. He—he's evidently in love with some one who doesn't reciprocate!"

John's quick recovery dated from the moment when, startled out of all reserve at the white, drawn face of the man she loved, Betty fell on her knees at his bedside and whispered brokenly, "Oh, my darling! My darling!"

The doctor prescribed a sea voyage to assist John's convalescing, and Betty not only acquiesced but made all arrangements, even to insisting that he must have a nurse along, and in order to provide one she would marry him! And John, weak but beautifully happy, could only thank heaven he had enough to keep them going.

Some time afterward, one glorious, breezy afternoon, Betty, leaning against the rail with John watching the scudding wake of their steamer heard a queer little chuckle from her husband.

"What is it, dear?" she asked.
"I was thinking," said John whimsically, "how very much surprised Miss Deborah Perkins must have been when she read 'I love you, sweet-heart!' in her radish bed!"

But not until the two of them were back at home again did they learn the true efficacy of John's vegetable message. Blushing like a bride herself, Miss Perkins welcomed them at the door, and after proper inquiries as to Mr. Bradley's health, she broke the news.

"Yes, Miss Betty, I'm Mrs. Ferguson now. Yes, ma'am, I knew you'd be surprised. He's that reserved you wouldn't have thought it of him. But he's clever, for all he's Scotch. He writ in radishes what he thought of me. And when I see them coming up in such lovely sentiments I went straight to him and said, 'Ferguson, I'm yours. We'll be married tomorrow.' And we was. And I'm sure if he hadn't thought of such a lovely way to get around his bashfulness we'd each been single yet!"

Give Hens Water

Hens need water. It is an essential part of the ration, poultry specialists of the Pennsylvania State College say. A shortage of water causes a decrease in the number and size of eggs. Chickens do not like cold water and will drink more if the chill is removed. Heated drinking fountains usually are good investments.

Local Doings Around Florin

late Company here for the past two years, recently severed his connections and will devote his time to the coal and feed business which he conducts in connection with his brother.

Mrs. Raymond Forwood, of town, was very pleasantly surprised last Thursday evening, when a number of friends and relatives called and each greeted her at the door with "Happy Birthday." Every detail was apparently looked after by a master mind, as entertainment, table decorations, and refreshments were all provided in logical order. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Strickler and Dottie Donley, of Maytown; Mrs. Marguerite Spence and Charles Rapp, Marietta; Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Coble and children, Mervin and Esther, Daniel Flowers and Miss Nora Ruhl, all of Elizabethtown; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Shetter and children Arthur, Warren and the Misses Blanche, Mabel and Goldie Shetter, and Caroline Rider, all of Florin.

Police have been asked to be on the alert for Tommy Hake, twenty-two years old, who is somewhat of a "cut-up" as his name indicates. Tommy, so the story goes, slept in the trolley waiting room at Florin during the night and was there when a large quantity of bread was delivered early in the morning. Hake decided to go in business right on the spot. The bread was consigned to Jacob Boyer, distributor for a Lancaster baking concern. Early morning customers usually come to the waiting room for their supply. Hake greeted early customers with a smile, explained he was the new assistant and made the sales. When Boyer arrived, his self-appointed assistant had vanished, the customers had been served and the money was gone. Chief of Police Elmer Zerphey, Mount Joy, believes the youth is connected with other thefts.

L'Enfant Planned Open Space in Washington

"Mall" was originally the name of the mallet used in playing pall-mall, a game in which a ball was driven with a mallet. In time "mall" was applied to the game itself, and by extension to the place where the game was played. Thus Pall-Mall (pronounced pell-mell), a famous street in London, received its name from the fact that the site was formerly a pall-mall alley. In the United States "The Mall" is applied specifically to a strip of land lying between the capitol and the Washington monument. It is bounded on the east by the capitol grounds, on the south by Maryland avenue and B Street Southwest, on the north by Pennsylvania avenue and B Street Northwest, and on the west by Seventeenth street. It includes the botanic garden, East Seaton park, West Seaton park, Henry park, Smithsonian grounds, agricultural grounds and the monument grounds. In the original plans prepared by the French engineer, L'Enfant, and approved by Washington, the Mall was to be 1,600 feet wide and was to present an unobstructed vista from the monument to the capitol. This plan was departed from, and there are now a number of buildings on the Mall. L'Enfant did not use the name "Mall" on his maps of Washington. On the original L'Enfant map, as well as on the maps of 1792 and 1822, this area is designated "Appropriation No. 2." After those dates the name "Mall" appears regularly in connection with the area in question.—Patriarch Magazine.
