Seattle May Build Its Own Trolley Cars

Seattle, Wash.—Seattle city fathers, already in the street car business, may turn street car builders and furnish 200 needed trolley cars for their municipal enterprise, should the city utilities heads accept a "build your own" plan recently submitted to them.

According to plans and estimates each car could be constructed at a saving of $2,000 over a cash bid tendered by a St. Louis car building firm. A saving of $5,500 per car would be made if the rolling stock was purchased on time.

Has Paralytic Stroke, Phone Beyond Reach

New York.—Only a few inches separated Albert E. Davis, sixty-three, Bronx architect, from his telephone. The telephone represented help, but Davis couldn't reach it.

He had a paralytic stroke at 6 p. m. in the office he has maintained for 42 years. His family finally called the police and at 4 a. m. a patrolman found him with his left side completely and his right side partially paralyzed. His condition is serious.

Some Cattle Market

Lancaster's stock yards do an annual business of approximately $25,000,000. Last year 250,000 head of cattle; 80,000 hogs and 22,000 sheep were handled in this city. It is estimated that cattle men paid the Pennsylvania railroad $1,700,000 in freight to handle incoming and outgoing animals.

There is no better way to boost your business than by local newspaper advertising.

The Mt. Joy Bulletin costs only $1.50 per year.

Leave It to Cupid

By LEETE STONE

BETTY LEE found the "Public Notices" in the paper the Sunday she was eighteen. Hers was a magazine-cover profile, and she was the daughter of strict parents. Their home was in Grangerville, a Hudson river hamlet.

All week she typed letters in her father's real estate office. Sundays she revelled in the world of her dreams—New York—mirrored for her eager, supple mind by the Sunday paper.

Betty retrieved the scattered sections of the paper after her father had flung it on the floor four ways from his Morris chair, sorted it into sections, and carried it to a silent, leafy dell in the woods nearby. Sparkling eyes, relieved with "Peachy J. Flagg of Borough of Manhattan," whose address was wanted by Glasgow solicitors. Waiting at the lawyer's office, surely, was a good-sized golden plum for Peachy from a renegade uncle, perhaps, whose family had burned his picture when he skipped with the church funds and lost himself in the diamond fields of Kimberley.

Keenly imaginative, Betty never missed these public notices. They were her first dramas. She built a story round each one, complete, with cast of characters, fitting sequence and a climax, sad or glad, at the dictum of her mood.

Ever since reading the story of Dorothy Blaine, describing how Yates Chandler, famous young illustrator, had found her pale and hungry, crouching on a subway bench, and lifted her to such fame as a model that her face became a familiar feature of every newsstand and library table in the land—ever since then Betty had resolved to go to New York and become an illustrator's model. And, if possible, Yates Chandler's model.

It would be so much more inspiring than typewriting. How to do this without estranging her parents? They definitely disapproved of Betty's dream, and there had been many a family "scene" over it.

An idea popped into her head from a bright, blue sky. Why not write him frankly and simply and explain her dream? Send him one of her high school graduation pictures which every one admired! Finally, ask him to have a heart-to-heart talk with dad when dad went to New York next time.

Both letter and photograph were posted to the Chandler studio address. For a week Betty tremulously anticipated a reply. But no response!

A month after her appointment Betty and her friend, Miriam, were motoring in Miriam's small roadster one Sunday afternoon. The lazing of low hills that fringed the tiny valley town on the river was the color of a gorgeous carpet of Bagdad, for autumn was early.

The girls were nearing a sharp, dangerous downgrade curve. It had been sprinkling for ten minutes and the road was ripe for skidding.

Miriam, driving, approached the edge of the curve carefully, her right side wheels in the gravel shoulder of the road. Suddenly the rear end of a long roadster was disclosed just ahead. Its nose jammed into an immense pine tree that towered majestically aloof from its neighbors on the exact edge of the highway.

Miriam showed both brakes into tight grip, knowing that the shoulder of the road would prevent skidding, and choked off her gas. Their little car stopped in thirty feet, almost touching the rear of the big roadster, which was skewed out at an angle well into the roadway.

Quite evidently a narrow turn, sudden braking, and a swift skid, with the pine tree for a bumper, was the result to this accident.

"Hello, there!" A somewhat unsteady voice reached the girls as they hurried from their car. They saw a tall, well-dressed man rising rather shakily from the low underbrush behind the big pine.

"I call that stupid driving, don't you?" He smiled and came to them. "Chucked me right over the windshield! Wonder if you girls could squeeze me in with you and take me to the nearest garage?"

Betty's heart almost stopped before it sent the blood thrilling through her body in a wild, enthusiastic rush. This fine face she recognized in the fading light belonged to Yates Chandler.

As they started off in the little car, the artist regarded Betty with close scrutiny.

"Haven't I seen you somewhere?" "I sent you my picture six weeks ago. I'm Betty Lee of Grangerville," Betty answered simply.

"What luck!" Yates Chandler postively beamed. "Let's bow to the great god of Coincidence! I was on my way to call on you and your mother and father this afternoon when I met the pine tree so forcibly. I could see from your picture that you were an unusual type, and I want you for a new series of illustrations."

Chandler's charm and sure sincerity won Betty's parents to happy acquiescence in her dream before supper was over. Later the artist and his new model strolled together down the quaint Lover's Lane that followed the broad leat of the moon-lit river, and a companionship was commenced that soon called for the loving care of Cupid.

Provide Roosts for Chicks

Young chicks should be encouraged to roost at an early age. The chicks will become accustomed to roosting if a low roost which slopes from the floor back of the hover to the rear of the house is provided. These roosts should be covered with wire netting to keep the chicks from crowding underneath.

Home Health Club

WEEKLY LETTER WRITTEN EXPRESSLY FOR THE BULLETIN BY DR. DAVID H. REEDER

LONG AGO: Many of my present day readers will find pleasure and profit in again reading an article that was written by my personal friend, Dudley Wadsworth, about twenty-five years ago, when this Home Health Club was in its infancy. It follows.

"There are many people who are always ready to deplore the evil that is in the world, but how few there are who take pains to mention the thousands of united forms for good that everywhere exist? Evil is nearly always combine or organized for the purpose of increasing or perpetuating evil. I speak boldly, admitting that it is true there are organizations for profit in which the traffic is considered by many but not all, as evil. Opposed to this, however, I might cite the vast number of religious, charitable, and health organizations of the world, mighty men of all nations and of all times have labored valiantly to overcome error with truth, and root out superstition and ignorance and teach people right living, pure morals, and hygienic as well as dietetic practices which will create a stronger, healthier, nobler race of men and women.

It is a curious characteristic of human nature that an individual gives little attention to his body until it begins to fail, in some of its functions. Then it commands consideration and all of the forces available are employed to put the different parts of the machine in harmonious and effective working order. In most cases a specialist is engaged—one familiar with the reactions of drugs on the machine, and he attempts to correct in a few hours abuses that by continuous operation for perhaps months, have modified the organism. This may be accomplished, but in almost every instance it is at the expense of some other part of the machine.

Prompted by these board generous impulses that have in time past changed the history of the human race, a work has been begun which it is hoped will lead to results of more than casual influence on humanity. The genus homo is large, conservative, and slowly modified, evolving to perfection by slow change in each individual, so that the efforts of one man must be well directed and better supported if anything is to be accomplished. He who essays to improve the individual man—no small study in itself, and above all things he must have the earnest sympathetic support of the object of his attention. Be he ever so persistent, without the latter co-operation his efforts will prove of no avail.

In times past there have been many attempts of men to stamp their personality on the development of their fellow-beings, principally through political or religious influences, but it is to modern times only that we can accredit an attempt to actually modify the body of the individual man. To so change that body that it will be adapted to its environments without the friction that is in almost every man, more or less apparent, is a great work. Relieving the little and greater pains, the evidences of mal-adjustment of the human anatomy to its surroundings, is one of the grandest efforts that future history will record, and to the Home Health Club will a generous share of the work be credited. "A newspaper course of education teachings how to yet well, and how to keep well," is the simple attribute of all the benefactors of the race.

Actuated by philanthropic motives that make the vast beneficencies of the great financiers seem selfish, the founder of this organization which has now grown to gigantic proportions, is devoting his life to correcting the bodily ills that afflict his fellow-men. Endowed with a fine intellect and personality, he has employed his talent well, accumulating a knowledge that at once commands respect and admiration. To relieve the ills of suffering humanity and avoid the errors that are responsible for suffering is the great work of which Dr. David H. Reeder has devoted his life. If you sympathize with him in his work, and wish to aid in the great plan, you are invited to join the Home Health Club.

Something over eleven thousand people have been sufficiently interested to become active members, while more than two million families are regularly reached through correspondence, or through the columns of newspapers and periodicals. Thus a large number of people have had the benefit of the philanthropic efforts of one whose only aim in life is to aid humanity. In order that the work may be extended, scientific knowledge of the cause of all ailments and the simple
