Dust Now Recognized as Powerful Explosive

It is more or less generally well known that all dust accumulations represent a menace of no mean proportions. Dust is explosive and many mills were wrecked by this mysterious power before the real cause was understood. In a mine, for instance, the explosion taking place in one chamber was carried to the next and so on until the explosive force swept through the entire mine and the workings were wrecked completely. It is only within a comparatively few years that it was ascertained that this march of destruction was conducted through the subterranean passages by the accumulation of dust on the walls and in the crevices. Now this is avoided by a coating which is sprayed on and which prevents the dust thus treated from exploding. In the case of grain mills the damage done by these mysterious bursts was particularly severe and the government agencies have been giving considerable attention to the study of these mysterious blasts. In the course of some experiments it was found possible to drive an automobile engine by the use of finely powdered corn dust. —Louisville Courier-Journal.

Dean, Dean and Son

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

THERE were many among their mutual friends who thought that John Dean was being somewhat dogmatic in so arbitrarily trying to force his son Basil into the trade that he himself was in.

John Dean was a butcher, his father before him had been a butcher and also his grandfather and each generation of butchers Deans had put the increasing chain of butcher shops on a sounder financial foundation.

The firm name was now Dean, Dean & Son—being the three successive Deans. And now because young Basil Dean had inherited from the mother whom he had scarcely known what he called artistic ability and his father called tommyrot, Basil had determined to establish himself in the millinery and costume trade.

"Imagine a son of mine, and a mouthful of pins, draping laces and taffeta on female forms!" stormed Dean Senior wrathfully.

He stormed, however, to no avail for young Basil was both sane and sound of faculty and knew what he was best equipped for in life's battle with finance.

And deep as was the regard between father and son, the inability of each to see the other's viewpoint estranged the two so that Basil moved from the old homestead of his forebears and took a small flat above the shop which he established.

And every time Dean Senior passed the small, exclusive shop that bore the name Dean, Incorporated, and had as its window display a frothy bit of chiffon and a dainty hat or two, he trembled with rage.

John Dean missed his son's presence about the house more than he cared to admit. He had been a widower for nearly twenty years and the house was lonesome with only the servants for company.

Perhaps that was why Dean happened to fall a victim to the undoubted charms of Constance Fry, the widow of a somewhat impoverished army officer. Constance had been forced to earn her own living and also to provide for the son who was even then ready to select a career for himself.

She herself had come into the millinery business and had succeeded remarkably only to realize that her son could find no joy in the thought of following in his mother's footsteps.

Peter Fry loved the butchering business and his only ambition was to belong to the chain of shops that Dean Senior was the head of. It had been through this idea of his that Mrs. Fry and Mr. Dean had met.

"His only inspiration is among bits of lamb and cow," she had lamented into Dean's sympathetic ear and there discussion as to Peter's future was the link that simply chained Dean Senior to her side until he could think of nothing but Constance and his longing to make her his wife and companion in the big empty house.

And having established son Peter comfortably among the choice cuts of lamb, ox tails and tripe, John Dean proceeded to lay siege to the heart of Constance.

But Constance was not so easily won, though she felt tremendously attracted to John Dean.

"I love my millinery business too much just to let it all go. I have enjoyed building it up and feel much pride in it. I wouldn't mind so much if I could find just the exact man to take over the actual working part of it and let me just continue designing costumes—but I can't marry you, John, until I find a man who exactly fits in with my scheme of keeping my business well on its feet." And with those words she had looked wistfully up into John's fine blue eyes.

Dean thought swiftly and to good purpose. He could win Constance for his wife and bring back his son to the fold—all in one big gesture of mental weakness—for John considered it a form of weakness once and for all to agree that his son should continue in any but the butchering business. However, since Constance was so desirable and son Peter ready to step into the line of Dean, Dean & Son—well—so be it.

That afternoon Dean, Senior, crossed the threshold of Dean, Incorporated, for the first but not the last time, and Basil looked up from some wonderful designs he was sketching. A smile far more wonderful than the colors of the drawings was the smile in his eyes.

"Dad—by Jove! It's actually dad!" and he jumped up to grasp his dad's hand in a grip that hurt. There was nothing feminine about young Basil.

An hour later the two went out arm in arm. All was harmoniously settled.

"It's great of you, dad, simply great," said Basil. "And I say, dad, do you think the new miter will like me?"

"Couldn't help it, my lad, you're made of the right stuff," said Dean Senior.

Genuine Advice
A man lent a friend a book, "How to Live to Be a Hundred."

Meeting a little later, the friend told the lender that his wife was reading the book in all the spare time she had. The lender was delighted.

A month later they met again and the lender again inquired about his friend's wife.

"She's doing wonderful," replied the friend. "She looks over one hundred now and she isn't fifty yet."

The instincts in a horse that are opposed to obedience to man increase in strength with age, so it is very desirable to begin the education of the colt as early as possible. A good plan is to break colts to lead before they are weaned, and to harness them between the ages of 2 and 3 years. Accustom colts to work gradually and do not use them at heavy work until they are practically mature.

Dire Punishment for Man "Mute of Malice"
"Mute of malice" is a legal term of considerable antiquity, and applies to prisoners who on being arranged in court refuse to plead. In a recent Dublin case, counsel said that to seek a verdict of this kind nowadays was only an "absurd formality."

But once it was not so. Then penalty was terribly severe. Here is an instance as late as 1740. A highway man, who pretended to be dumb and refused to plead at Kilkenny assizes, was tried as to whether he was "mute and lunatic by the hand of God or willfully so." On being found "mute of malice," he was sentenced to be pressed to death, a decree which was carried out in the market place.

"As the weights were heaping on the wretched man" (says an account) "he earnestly supplicated to be hanged but it being beyond the power of the sheriff to deviate from the mode of punishment prescribed in the sentence, even this was an indulgence which could be no longer granted to him."—London Mail.

Many markets made a deduction in weight or in price for live poultry that is "overcropped." It is advisable not to put any feed in the coops when shipping poultry to market. If the birds will not arrive at the market for 24 hours or more, one or two tin cans filled with corn well soaked in water may be nailed in each coop. The water in the corn helps to satisfy the birds' thirst, and the corn helps to cut down shrinkage in weight, but does not make the crops too full.

All-round EFFICIENCY

is the real test of a motor fuel

EASY STARTING. Without sacrifice of power, Atlantic Gasoline contains just enough of the lighter or more volatile elements needed to let the spark take hold at low temperatures—when the motor is cold.

Do you buy this or that motor fuel because of some lone outstanding feature claimed for it? . . . And in doing so, do you forget or underestimate the importance of the other qualities needed for its many-sided job?

"One-armed" motor fuels are numerous. It is easy to develop any one quality at the sacrifice of others. . . . But it is quite another matter to develop all of them to a high degree.

High all-round efficiency is an accomplished fact in the new-type Atlantic Gasoline. It is smooth-acting. The extra power in it is pronounced. . . . Yet Atlantic is amazingly easy-starting—marvelously quick on pick-up—and so unbelievably clean-burning that carbon and valve-pitting are ancient history.

READY OBTAINABILITY. No matter how good a motor fuel may be, it is of little use to you unless you can get it when you want it. Atlantic is always nearby.

EXTRA POWER. By bringing more of the higher power-producing elements of petroleum into the form that enables modern motors to utilize them fully, a pronounced degree of extra power has been developed in Atlantic Gasoline.

QUICK PICK-UP. Easy ignition, through a scientifically balanced "chain of boiling points" makes Atlantic instantly responsive to the command of the throttle.

ATLANTIC GASOLINE
