MAKE IT SAFE TO BE HUNGRY!

TODAY, leading medical authorities are constantly advising better care of food—earnestly urging you to adopt scientific refrigeration. For, they have discovered that perishable foods must be kept at a temperature below 50 degrees always. At higher temperatures harmful germs thrive and multiply at an alarming rate. Foods become unsafe, positively harmful.

For the sake of your family's health, investigate the new all-steel General Electric Refrigerator. Automatically, without the slightest attention, this refrigerator keeps foods at the scientifically correct temperature safely below 50 degrees.

There are now more than 300,000 users of General Electric Refrigerators and not one has ever spent a single dollar for repairs. This was our guarantee, justified by the remarkable reliability of our refrigerator. Put the General Electric Refrigerator on the job in your home as guardian of your family's health. Visit our display rooms and examine this refrigerator.

Let us explain these 14 superiorities

- 1... an hermetically sealed mechanism.
- 2... an all-steel, warp-proof cabinet.
- 3... an accessible temperature control.
- 4... a mechanism requiring no oiling.
- 5... troublesome machinery eliminated.
- 6... a new standard of quiet operation.
- 7... on legs—broom-room underneath.
- 8... no installation problem whatever.
- 9... a porcelain chilling chamber.
- 10... entire mechanism mounted on top.
- 11... maximum food storage space.
- 12... absolutely no radio interference.
- 13... a two-year guarantee.
- 14... convenient easy payments.

Listen in on the General Electric Hour, broadcast every Saturday evening, 8 to 9 Eastern Standard Time, over the N.B.C. network of forty-two stations.

Aunt Sally's Candy

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

"I WISH I could find an attractive name for my candies," sighed Barbara as she wrapped one after another of the barley-sugar sticks in squares of paper.

"What's about 'Barbara's Best'?" asked her frivolous brother.

"Nonsense! That might mean my best beau—my best frock—anything. You're such a lot of help, Bruce," she said witheringly.

No one in the family had taken her project seriously and Barbara was, perhaps, too touchy when they joked her about her business career.

Suddenly, as she sat wrapping these newly originated sticks of colored candy for children she thought of her Aunt Sally Martin, who had been the only member of the family who really encouraged her from the beginning. "Aunt Sally's Candy!" she cried aloud.

"But it isn't," insisted her literal brother, still in a teasing mood.

"It is because she kept me from being discouraged that I am making it at all," said Barbara, "and Aunt Sally's Candy it shall be."

It was not twenty-four hours before she had ordered the box labels with the new name of her to-be-famous sweets printed on them. Something in the thought of a real name on a real label inspired Barbara and she went to work with all her energy to make her candies.

She made boxes of animals on sticks. She made fondant and colored it and dressed it in everything from candied violet leaves to bitter chocolate polka dots and green mint leaves dipped in sugar. She made ginger branches and orange slices, candy houses like young Noah's Arks for the children, and she made delicate patties in all the shades of the rainbow and advertised them to fit in with the color schemes of any luncheon.

There was not a clubhouse nor a woman's exchange within a hundred miles of her home town in which she did not eventually get her pretty candies.

Particularly successful was her children's candy. She designed a new box for the sweets for small boys and girls and on the dainty label she had a portrait of a gentle, elderly person as nearly resembling her own Aunt Sally as it was possible for the artist to make it from description.

Barbara was very happy in her success. There was a cloud on her horizon, but she had so successfully hidden it that no one knew that she was not supremely happy.

There was one person whom she missed in her life, one man who had loved her and who, because she had insisted on going into her career free from promises or thoughts of marriage, she had sent away.

Christopher Chatsworth had been at a neighboring school while Barbara was at St. Mary's and their early friendship and budding romance had been during that time. Later, Christopher had won a foreign scholarship and had returned to find that he still cared for his girl sweetheart. But Barbara, in the meantime, had taken up her career. Christopher had been discouraged; it was nearly two years since she had heard of him.

She was sitting in the morning sunlight on the big screened porch drawing designs for a new lolly-pop while the fragrance of boiling sugar permeated the air. She heard a car draw up at the front gate.

Suddenly she heard small voices, together with a man's tones, in the big living room.

"Just wait a minute and I'll see if Miss Barbara will see you," she heard the maid saying.

Barbara's heart had begun to increase its action at the sound of the man's voice. "Come in," she called.

"A young man and two children would like to see 'Aunt Sally,'" said the maid.

When she stood in the big living room with her hands clasped warmly in those of Christopher Chatsworth, she could not believe that it was a real moment. Two children stared up at her.

"She's not Aunt Sally," cried one, disappointed.

The man went on to explain. "They're having Aunt Sally's Candy on birthdays and high days and holidays for two years and I have always promised them that some time when I was visiting their mother, my sister who lives some ten miles from here, I would bring them over to see Aunt Sally's kitchen—and Aunt Sally!"

Barbara sighed happily. "It is truly fate, Chris, isn't it?"

Christopher nodded. "It is. For I assure you I had no notion but what the dear old lady on the painted box of Aunt Sally's Candies was indeed just—Aunt Sally."

Barbara explained just how she had happened to adopt the name. And after that she took the children into her kitchen and gave them candies to keep them quiet while she and their uncle said many things to each other.

"Yes, if you're willing to be known as Aunt Sally's husband," Barbara was saying when one sticky youngster overheard.

"Has Aunt Sally a husband?" piped the lad.

"No—son, but she's going to have," said Uncle Chris definitely.

PA. BUYS LAND AT MT. GRETNA

mately 4,000 additional acres in the locality and it is believed that much of this land will be purchased after the newly-created Military Reservations Commission, of which General E. C. Shannon, of Columbia, is a member, begins work at the close of this year's training period. General Shannon denied that the Commission, which met recently for organization, has taken any action as yet on any of the work with which it is charged. The body was empowered, by the Administrative Code passed by the last Legislature to decide on whether to expand the reservation at Mt. Gretna or to select another site. The measure carried with it an appropriation of $300,000 for the purchase of additional land.

Mr. Garrett stated today that negotiations with General Beary were begun late in May. He declined to reveal the purchase price.

According to General Shannon, the commission will meet to begin its work in August, after the close of this year's encampment.

The latest acquisition at the reservation was put to use immediately when the annual encampment was opened, some of the 700 horses which arrived at the camp, being quartered on the tract.

Keep Milk Cool
Do not let milk in cans stand in the sun while waiting for the hauler, say Penn State dairy specialists. Provide shade, and cover with a wet blanket or canvas. Such simple precautions help to keep the milk cool and prevent loss.

If the colt becomes accustomed to having his feet handled and trimmed before he is weaned, much future work and trouble will be avoided. Untrimmed hoofs usually grow long and uneven, and the result may be a crooked foot, or, what is worse, a crooked leg. Failure to regulate the length and bearing surface of the foot may make a straight leg crooked, while good care of the foot during the growing period will greatly improve a leg that is crooked at birth.
