ATE one afternoon in soft air that caressed his nostrils with the fragrant scent of spring Gerald Parker strolled out of his office and down the avenue where he lived in a lonely apartment.

At the corner he stooped to pick up an envelope that lay on the sidewalk. Had the letter been stamped Parker would probably not have so much as glanced at the name and address; but would have slipped it in the corner box a few steps away. He decided to stamp the letter at his desk at home and hand it to the elevator boy in his apartment to post at once. The address on Parker's find was "Mrs. Horatio Dillingham, 60 Beaumont Avenue, City."

Returning home to his quiet quarters Gerald Parker was seized by inique train of thought.

"Of course," he mused, letting himself in, "any other chap that would have had the luck to find an unstamped letter addressed to MISS Somebody or Other could deliver it in person and open, perhaps, a prospect osy with possibility."

Absently sitting down at his desk and reaching for the little silver stamp oox, the man allowed his thoughts to turn in the direction of the fireplace: "Now there was that silly chap Briggs who hadn't enough sense of the ideal fitness of things to marry the girl he saved from drowning at Belpar beach last summer-and there was Woodruff," he addressed the di-Misses Annie and Sarah Ebersole of van sagaciously without glancing at the stamp box in his hand, "who had the chance of a lifetime when he stopped a charming widow's runaway horse on the speedway-while here am I, a true remantic soul, barred at the very start of a pleasant denouement Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Felker. Mr. Stonby 'Mrs. Horatio.' '

Finally he pressed the little catch that opened the stamp box only to find it quite empty. At once he searched through his wallet and cardcase for a stray stamp. Not a single one! Very well . . . he would have dinner, buy some stamps at the drug store and post the letter on his way home.

Meeting some interesting companions at the tiny Bohemian restaurant where he usually dined, Gerald Parker sat late over coffee and conversation. On his return he bought stamps, stuck one determinedly on the retrieved letter, and was about to drop it in the drug store box when a whimsical thought singled him out. Gerald returned to the glass-topped eigar counter and scribbled in lead pencil on the back of the letter: "May this missive bring you all you wish for." And he signed his name and office address.

By the second morning afterward the incident had left Parker's mind Therefore his surprise was great, indeed, to find among his early office mail a letter addressed in a handwriting that sent the blood pounding up from his heart to his head. The last time he had seen that handwriting it had sent him severely from the village of his birth to the thronged city, in search of solace for

So Now We Begin Our Fall Sale in All Departments, which of Course Includes the Presentation of Latest Styles for Autumn.

In presenting our new Fall Mer-handise we wish to remind the people of Lancaster and adjoining counties of the advantages which this store offers because of its different kind of business policies and its different atmosphere of friendliness. In these days of sharp com-petition, many wild newspaper advertisements, impossible claims and confusing statements it is difficult for people to know where to put their trust and in what store to re-pose their confidence. This statement is written to give what we be-lieve is valuable information to thoughtful and thrifty people, who desire to shop at ease and with mental satisfaction and confidence, feeling while shopping a conviction that styles are right, assortments are right, qualities are right, and prices are right. When folks can go to a store with this confidence shopping becomes a pleasure the store becomes a good fr and helper. This has always the aim and ambition of this institution and the thousands of customers who throng our aisles and each day attest to what length there succeeded. thousands we have are should make this then strength and we believe if they knew us should make same pleasant shopping thrills now enjoyed by our older friends. To know us better it is necessary to know our business principles and know our business policies and to understand how and why we are different kind of a store.

We are not a chain store but we do belong to a group of superior stores scattered over America whose output of merchandise amounts to two hundred millions of dollars ($200,000,000) a year. us great buying advantages equal to any chain group and no store can excel us in buying advantages. Then WE BUY FOR CASH which gives us and our customers the benefit of every discount. It addi-tion to this WE SELL FOR CASH which method of business reduces the cost of running a store naterially. This saving is made by reducing the office force to a minimum and office forces cost money which a credit business makes up people who pay. On the first of the month we send out no bills, no dunning letters or no collectors for no one owes us anything. All this saving is returned to our customers in low-er prices. And while we buy and sell for cash and our prices are therefore lower our qualities are all dependable. We allow nothing trashy to come into the store be-cause our reputation is back of everything we sell and if any article bought here is not right we make it right cheerfully and gladly.

In addition to superior merchan-dise and lower prices we provide our customers with many comforts which makes shopping here an agreeable experience. An accom-modation desk is here where all packages, baskets, topcoats, or other burdens may be left until wanted. free of charge. Information may also be had and postoffice requirements secured. Rest rooms, lava-tories, mother's room, telephones and other modern service are at the command of every customer. Free all day parking service for our customers has been provided for at the Manhattan Hotel at 51 West King Street and at D. W.
