ASSAILS P. S. C.
In an address at Philadelphia on Thursday night former Governor Gifford Pinchot declared that the "Pennsylvania Public Service Commission was bussed by the utilities and not the people."
The former executive thinks the Commission should be abolished and replaced by a fair rate board, the members of which should be chosen by direct vote.

PENNSYLVANIA DAY
Pennsylvanians can profit by a deeper knowledge of the life of William Penn—his character, his principles and his devotion to what he conceived to be right. A greater appreciation of the colony he founded, of the ideals which motivated it, and of the Commonwealth which has resulted from that humble but auspicious beginning, should be developed. Out of Penn's Holy Experiment has grown a substantial Commonwealth—rich in material resources, conspicuous in its spiritual contributions and social advancements, and great in its future possibilities.
The observance of Pennsylvania Day is but one event in a continuous study of our Founder and our Commonwealth. A sustained effort in this direction is certain to result in a general lifting of the level of citizenship, thus making us more worthy of our heritage and more devoted to the principals and ideals of William Penn.

THE TARIFF SHOW
The tariff controversy is a perfect illustration of much talk and little action.
This, of course, is the way it should be from the political standpoint. There is no drama in sound economics and unbiased statesmanship. Rhetorical bickering is the stuff of which votes are made.
But from the viewpoint of the wage-earners, farmers and manufacturers of this country, the situation is a serious one. We cannot expand and progress to the limit of our potentialities so long as we do not know what position we will be in competing with foreign producers in the American market. All we can do is wait and hope.
And, in the meantime, the tariff will remain one of the main attractions of the political circus—a show held at public expense.

FARM ROADS NEEDED
A practical method of "farm relief" is for every state to adopt a program of building farm-to-market roads as rapidly as their budgets will allow.
In the past the city dweller has received most of the advantages accruing from the building of highways. The farmer, though one of our foremost taxpayers and producers, has not been given his share of improved roads.
Social and commercial contact with the outside world, through the medium of low cost, hard surfaced highways, makes for more progressive and prosperous agriculture.
So long as millions of American farmers are kept from their markets during many months of the year by unimproved roads, there will be a serious farm problem. It is the duty of every state to give agricultural districts roads which are practical for travel all the year round.

ATTRACTING LOCAL INDUSTRIES
There was once a time when new industries sought the larger cities. Location in large centers was considered essential to industrial success. During the past decade there has been a trend in the opposite direction, many manufacturers moving their plants away from the large centers of population because of the many advantages in less highly populated communities. This change seems to prove that big business can go where it pleases.
A manufacturer does not move to a new location without first making a very comprehensive survey, and two of the things he considers are—"Does this community offer attractive living conditions for my employees?" and "Are the citizens loyal to their home industries?"
A diversification of industries is important to a town from the payroll standpoint, just as a diversification of crops is important to the farmer. The failure of one crop from any cause will not break the farmer if he has others to depend on, and if a town is supporting several industries, they will in turn support the town. Diversification stabilizes the earnings of the community.

Towns and cities in every part of the country are striving to attract industry. They have come to the realization of the fact that it is essential to community growth and development. They are "putting their house in order," they are making their communities inviting to industry.
This community is in need of a greater industrial development, and we should bear in mind that even the smallest industry is a valuable asset to a town. Our success in this endeavor depends upon our always making our locality attractive to industry.

Explaining Beat Cross on Crown of Hungary
With reference to a question recently asked concerning the famous St. Stephen's crown of Hungary and the reason why the cross on top of it is bent, a Hungarian reader, B. S. writes as follows: "As a painter I painted signs which bear the Hungarian royal crown. My master told me they had a revolution in 1848 and some one buried the crown in the forest of Lakwa, southeast of Zlatica. Nobody knew of it for years until Franz Josef was to be crowned. The government sent men to look for it and by the help of a Serbian shepherd they found it with its cross bent." This story is confirmed by Henri de Wendels' book, "The Real Francis Joseph," which states: "Before Kossuth left he buried with his own hands the Hungarian crown, the old crown of St. Stephen, in the neighborhood of the frontier village of Orsova. When it was recovered later, the little cross on the top was found bent on one side. From this time onward the arms of Hungary have borne a crown with a cross bent toward the left."—Detroit News.

Beaver's Powerful Tail Serves Many Purposes
There is a popular belief that the beaver's tail is so broad as to be able him to use as a trowel in his construction work. Scientists, however, have observed that the beaver usually carries in his fore paws the mud, rock or sticks with which he builds and that he uses the tail to steady himself, either by planting it on the ground or by waving it from side to side. In the water he uses it as a rudder and sometimes as a propeller.
The beaver's tail is flat and wide. Its steering power is taxed to the limit as the beaver swims, tugs, by the side of a pole or log that he is towing to the house, dam, or food cache. It keeps him from moving in circles. By its loud slaps on the surface of the water, the tail also serves as a "signal gun" which acts as a warning to friends or enemies.

Weasel's Store
In a recent issue we mentioned a bird that provides stores for the winter. Weasels share this foresight.
When sliding a peeper at a swimmill it was found that no fewer than 44 mice had been carefully stocked, one above the other, in an ordered pile, with sand and mould between them, to form an airtight mound. These mice were in as fresh condition as if they had just been caught.
Two magpies had been placed on top of them, and a large collection of acorns filled the hollowed-out cavity to the entrance, which was just large enough for the weasel to slip inside.—London Tit-Bits.

Coconut Propagation
Coconuts are propagated differently from almost any form of fruit or nut. The coconut, as it forms in the outer hull, is buried in the ground, and the embryo gains nourishment first from the coconut milk, and as the growth of the plant advances the white meat which we eat becomes soft and spongy and also feeds the young plant. After a certain stage of development has been reached small roots reach out into the ground, and by the time they are sufficiently long and strong enough to feed the nourishment to the plant from the earth the original coconut has entirely disintegrated.

From Youth to Age

There are three trying periods in a woman's life: when the girl matures to womanhood, when a woman gives birth to her first child, when a woman reaches middle age. At these times Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helps to restore normal health and vigor.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND
