Jacob's Ladders Mended

By MATILDA STAPLEY

EVERLY was a business man and not in the least temperamental but the artistic side of his nature would burst out now and again in spite of him. It had been bursting forth of late in the form of interior decorating. His own three bachelor rooms were having a regular overhauling as re gards color scheme. Saturday after noons and Sundays Everly spent on a small ladder he had purchased from an impoverished artist, stenciling birds and beasts and what not above the molding of his library.

He was having a happy time until he nearly broke up his anatomy as well as the ladder on which he was perched. They came down together in a heap, Everly fortunately unbroken but the ladder faring much worse. It was a light, steel and wood affair daintily built for the use of artists. He sat down in a peeve. It was early on Saturday afternoon and the day and tomorrow would be wasted.

Everly was no good at mending things -even a broken heart that he supposed he was carrying about within him. In his early and very tender years he had loved a maiden who had thrown him down to marry a richer man and since that time he had left girls strictly alone.

He picked up the paper idly, thinking more of his loss than what he was reading, but suddenly he saw an advertisement that caught and held his interest. It read: "Jacob's ladders mended, invisible and good as new. N. Carter."

down the address, which was not far away, folded up his ladder and began to whistle.

The day had brightened. He hoped Carter would be in on Saturday and could mend the ladder while he FRESH COWS AND SPRINGERS waited.

Everly realized that he had never heard of a ladder known as Jacob's and Jerseys but he supposed that anyone who could mend ladders could assuredly mend this one.

Everly went by taxi to a side street where he supposed Carter's shop would be, taking the ladder with him. The taxi drew into the curb but not in front of a shop. It was one of the lesser apartment buildings.

"Well," supposed Everly, "Carter evidently does a little home work." He got out with his ladder and collided in the dark hall with a young lady about to ascend the stairway. Everly drew back to let her go up ahead of him but she turned a too pale face toward him and asked that he go first. "I'm very tired," she said, "and want to take my time going up. So Everly went on with his ladder but was vividly conscious all the way of the lovely girl toiling up behind him. He wanted to wait and give he an arm up the stairs. However, he arrived at the fourth floor and saw the name "Carter" on the doorplate. The girl was just behind and stood on the same landing while he put down his ladder and rang "Are you wanting N. Carter?" asked

"Well, yes-I want to get this ladder mended. I read his advertisement in the paper and-" Nan Carter grasped the stair rail lest she lose her balance. "Oh!" she said, and then repeated the bright remark. "Oh!" Then she smiled at him. "If you let me-I will open the door for you. I live here Everly and his supposed Jacob's l der followed her into a cheery apartment. His thoughts now worked upon the supposition that the girl had an indigent husband who worked at home mending ladders while she toiled in the city. He felt that he would dislike the husband. He waited a moment or two while Nan divested herself of a small hat, thereby releasing a glorious riot of titian hair.

She was more at home and felt she could handle this delicate situation without wounding him now that she had him safely within the apartment. She had dreaded turning him and his ladder away in the hall. "Will you be frightfully hurt at if I laugh at you?" she asked.

"By Jove," said Everly swiftly, "I don't think I care what you do to me.' And he quite meant what he said be cause he knew without the slightest doubt that this girl was one day going to be Mrs. Everly.

"Then come here and let me show you a Jacob's tadder." Everly drew nearer the girl and also to her sewing basket heaped high with stockings. She picked one up and, running her hand down it, showed him a real Jacob's ladder. "That's the kind I mend," she laughed softly. Everly burst into a regular guffaw that must have been heard in the next apartment, and after a moment of very happy laughter they found each gered. "It only shows you," said Everly breathlessly, "how more than guileless I am where womenfolks are con cerned.'

The girl looked up at him with great tenderness in her eyes. "Some 'womenfolks' long to know just such men as you." she said. "I'll manage that, in this case," Everly fold her
