The latter part of last week a concern was in town cleaning boilers and chimneys. While working at Roy Sheetz's and the large bag was filled to capacity, Joe Dewitler, one of Joe HERSHEY's barbers, went across the street and asked how soon the "Zep" was going up.

The laziest man we know of is the fellow who is glad we had the drought because he didn't have to mow the yard so often this summer.

We don't know why they call them rumble seats, but we could understand why they might name them grumble seats.

It's not cigarettes and hard liquor that's making the girls that way these days; it's climbing in and out of rumble seats.

You've often heard of people "raising a stink" but here's one that has them all stopped. A genuine, honest to goodness skunk lodged under Curley Hendrick's back porch one night last week. That entire neighborhood was a unit that Mr. Pole Cat sure did raise a stink and then some.

Two fellows up at Rohrer's Garage in a conversation. One said that his wife was very methodical—a place for everything and everything in its place.

The other said: "So has mine but I can very seldom find the place."

I asked Andy Martin his idea of an ideal place for a vacation. He said: "A place where the fish bit and the mosquitoes do not, and where neither the Levis nor the hotel keeper stings you."

I went to a certain restaurant and asked if they had pumpkin pie. The clerk said: "Take it from me, mister, the pies are all punk—in here."

A certain family here was seated at the table with a guest who was a business acquaintance of dad's, all ready to enjoy the meal, when the five-year old son blurted out, "Why mother, this is roast beef!" "Yes," answered the mother, "what of it?" "Well, pop said this morning that he was going to bring that big fish home for dinner tonight."

A certain young lady here sprung a new one recently. She uses radiote lipstick so she can be found easily in the dark.

Sam Miller tells me that the electric wires got mixed up a bit at his place of business. The radio was making ice blocks and the electric refrigerator was playing "Montana Moon."

The girls nowadays are pretty smart. One of our young belles told me that her beau had cold feet and in my time they never found that out until they were married.

I heard a Mt. Joy street girl try to make a gangster date with a young chap the other evening. She wanted to be taken for a ride.

Two motorists banged into each other and one said: "I had the right of way, didn't I?" "Yes, but I should worry. I had a truck," said the other.

Freddy—Mamma, does papa ever kiss our kitty?
Mamma—Why, no, Freddy. What makes you ask such a question?
Freddy—Well, this morning when I passed the maid's room I heard papa tell her she was ten times better than kissing the old cat.

They tell me that Mrs. Willis Freed asked her neighbor Mrs. John Newcomer how to make deviled eggs. The neighbor said they were made with pepper, salt and mustard.

About a week later Mrs. Freed said that recipe must be wrong. She fed the hens all that stuff and they haven't laid one deviled egg yet.

A lady from town went to the

SALUNGA

Mrs. Henry G. Greiner of near Elstonville after spending a week with her daughter, Mrs. Allan Dattisman, at Salunga, went to her other daughter, Mrs. Menno Ober on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Allan Dattisman entertained at their home on Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. Menno Ober, daughter Dorothy and sons Leroy and Greiner; Mr. and Mrs. William Greiner and daughters Rhoda, Martha and Mary of near Elizabethton; Mr. and Mrs. William Adair and son William of Columbia.

An imperfect seal, or lack of sterilization will cause catsup to spoil. Bottles should be sterilized, and filled while they are boiling hot, with boiling catsup, and then processed in the water bath canner for 30 minutes.

So Tully, in a maze of wonder, straddled his chair and commenced to read the "manuscript." It was titled, "For the Love of Mike,"—a name that rapped familiarly at his brain. Nearly every phrase and line of the story fell into line with his dim recollection.

"But I didn't write it! How come?" he breathed, finishing the story. Then his eye caught a line of longhand in Nan's handwriting on the lower margin of the last page.

"This is the story you told me that last evening. I just typewrote it from memory, and 'Love Annals' has taken it. It's all yours. Buck up and try again."

Tully sat with the manuscript crumpled in his hand for many moments lost in the mystery and infinite resource of Nan's love for him.

"My story! To be in print, and paid for—and Nan did it. What a girl!"

It was the touch of fire that made a fighter of Mark Tully. Something soft and yielding in his temperament was hardened. Nan had made her man.

Treat Wheat for Smut
Stinking smut is a costly pest of wheat. Treating the seed with copper carbonate dust will insure a clean crop. Thoroughly mix the grain with two and one-half ounces of dust for each bushel, say State College plant pathologists.

Carrots are a good source of vitamins, if quickly cooked or grated raw in a vegetable salad.

Nan Had Made Her Man

FOR two years Nan Smith had tried to fire Mark Tully with high ambition. He was the easy to discourage, sincere and talented type that needs a definite overture from success to spur him over the high hurdles down the track of persistent effort. She had finally persuaded him to go to New York.

"Now, that's a story!" Nan punctuated the climax of one of Tully's fascinating, fanciful yarns with enthusiasm. "Write that tonight, Tully."

"Yes, dear," he answered, moodily, staring at the flames from the hearth fire in Nan's cozy parlor in the little city of Sioux Bend.

Nan was sure Tully would topple into the bed the moment he reached his room, sleep until almost time for his train to New York, and have to be scrambled on board by a kindly conductor.

"For a cent I wouldn't go, Nan. Darn it! Let's be married on the money I've saved from the Bugle job—and keep that job. If I can write at all, I can land from here just as well as in New York, can't I?"

"Oh, Tully, my dear, I'm hoping New York will fill you with fire and fight. You need strife! I want you to go over the top. Tell me, where'll you finish as reporter for the Bugle? Why, Tully—at fifty you'll be smug and satisfied and through."

"O. K., Nan child! Hate to leave you, that's all."

Nan Smith sat up late after Tully left. She was a girl with "front," darling, born of a struggle. She loved a man of true ability who shunned the arena of life. So she sent him to the greatest arena of them all—New York.

A slim chance, perhaps. Nan's blood danced down from prairie schooner fighters. Tully's tied down from a field of picturesque southern panoramas. Dominance was linked to charm.

Having arrived at the Grand Central, Tully took a firm grip on his typewriter, well-spangled in the interests of prairie erudition; patted the hip pocket which contained his capital—$200—and eagerly sought the hall bedroom where he was to start his ascent of Parnassus.

Situated finally, Tully worked hard. He wrote mornings and devoted afternoons to seeking a market for his feature stories with editors of all the papers. He hoped the quality of his stories would eventually secure him a regular staff position.

At the end of six weeks his money was nearly gone and he had no job; but he had tried hard. Competition offered by clever staff men in the feature field was too keen to be met successfully in so short a time. Editors were busy men. There were a score or more applicants for every vacancy.

Back home Nan's heart sank at the courage shown to cloak discouragement which she sensed in Tully's letters. She had nursed a far fetched idea for giving him a boost a long time. Now was the moment to try it. The time had come for a possible smile from Lady Luck.

Meantime, Nemesis was snapping at Tully's heels. One morning found him staring, in deep thought, at a small snubnose that palpitated on the ragged carpet of his garret room. Knocking at the door roughly, the superintendent entered.

"Your rent's three weeks overdue, Mr. Tully. I'll have to have the room or the money tomorrow."

Listening to the departing footsteps as they met each descending stair with the dullful clump of authority, Tully murmured with the smile that always won him friends:

"Oh, well, things might be worse!" Footsteps in the hall again, and a voice drawing, "Registered letter for Mark Tully." Tully signed for the missive feverishly. Nan's name typewritten in the upper corner of the envelope.

Tully whisked the letter open and shook out the contents. A check fluttered to the floor. He snatched it up and saw that it was made out to him, for a hundred dollars, from a good magazine.

Mystified, he muttered, "Some mistake!" and searched for a note from Nan which surely must be somewhere in this folded carbon copy of a manuscript which the torn envelope revealed. He found no apparent word from her!

So Tully, in a maze of wonder, straddled his chair and commenced to read the "manuscript." It was titled, "For the Love of Mike,"—a name that rapped familiarly at his brain. Nearly every phrase and line of the story fell into line with his dim recollection.

"But I didn't write it! How come?" he breathed, finishing the story. Then his eye caught a line of longhand in Nan's handwriting on the lower margin of the last page.

"This is the story you told me that last evening. I just typewrote it from memory, and 'Love Annals' has taken it. It's all yours. Buck up and try again."

Tully sat with the manuscript crumpled in his hand for many moments lost in the mystery and infinite resource of Nan's love for him.

"My story! To be in print, and paid for—and Nan did it. What a girl!"

It was the touch of fire that made a fighter of Mark Tully. Something soft and yielding in his temperament was hardened. Nan had made her man.
