OWL-LAFFS

O. W. L.
(On With Laughter)

Hello Folks, it is not what a man does during working hours, but after them, that breaks down his health. Business is like oil—it won't mix with anything but business.

For the benefit of the ladies as well as the men, I want to give the latter a little sound advice. Instead of buying the cheapest kind of a wedding ring for your best girl, always buy her the very best you can afford. Believe me it will come in darn handy after you are married and want to hook it.

And then again. After you're married don't lie to your wife. You'll soon find out you can't do that successfully.

Down at the Grey Iron the other morning one of the bosses said: "You are twenty minutes late again. Don't you know what time we start work at this factory?" "Nope, they're always at it when I get here."

Some people imagine they are being sympathetic when really they are only being inquisitive.

Women are funny. The only funnier people are men.

HOW IS IT BY YOU?
I love my wife in the Summer,
And I love her in the Fall,
But when she starts housecleaning,
I love her not at all.

They say a divorced woman is the shrewdest sort of woman, but, then a widow ain't so foolish, either.

It's funny about nature, making prunes more healthful than strawberries.

Our friend Jake Hershey tells a good one on his friend Jake Snyder, the extensive contractor and builder at Florin. This is a pair of the best pinocchio players in Florin and recently when Snyder was asked to give an estimate on a garage he bid seven spades.

The Five-Day Week
The modern Sunday wears us out, And may we please suggest That we be given Monday off So we can get a rest?

"Under no circumstances would I marry a girl to reform her," said a Mount Joy shiek. "So far as I can see most of their forms appear to be all right already."

A lady living here bought a bag of candy at Darrenkamp's, took it home and gave it to her son, telling him to divide it with his little sister. There were seven pieces and mother watched him carefully. He laid all the candy on the table, saw his predicament, ate the largest piece and then divided equally as he was told.

Just For Fun
"How long you in jail fo', Mose?"
"Two weeks."
"What am de cha're?"
"No cha'ge, everything am free."
"Ah mean, what has you did?"
"Done shot my wife."
"You killed yo' wife and only in jail for two weeks?"
"Dat's all—then I gits hung."

The Dear Boy
"Did the children behave when you bathed them?" asked the mistress of the new French nurse.
"All but ze biggest boy—and, mirableu!—how he fight and kick an nearly tear ze face off me before I could get him in."
"Which biggest boy—we've only one boy, and he's only two years old?"
"Eet is no him at all, I mean. 'Tis a boy who wears glasses an, has ze curly hair."
"Boy! Boy! That's not a boy! That's my husband!"

Don't forget that no matter what kind of a frock she wears, even if it has no past, it always has something to hide.

Many a girl spends her single days looking for a husband, and her married nights the same way.

Perhaps one reason marriage is not always a success is because so many inexperienced people go in for it.

A wife complained to a Chicago judge that she believed her husband, the father of her 23 children, was on too friendly terms with another woman. Flatterer!

"Shorn of her clothes, there's mighty little difference between Miss 1931 and Miss 1875," declares "Phylis" in a Sunday paper.

HEALTH TALK

WRITTEN BY DR. THEODORE B. APPEL, SECRETARY OF HEALTH

"Reports from the office of the Surgeon General of the U. S. Public Health Service indicate that throughout the nation there is a general existence of influenza conditions. And while Pennsylvania has thus far been affected only in a few definite localities, now is the time to take steps to prevent the spread of these manifestations, insofar as that is possible; and more especially to appreciate the value of the common sense rules that are applied to cases of this character," said Dr. Theodore B. Appel, Secretary of Health, today.

"In the first place, everyone should be particularly careful to avoid draughts, wet feet, undue exposure, superheated and poorly ventilated rooms, and over exhaustion, indeed any type of conduct that tends to lower resistance, including late hours and excesses of all kinds. Moreover, unless the necessity exists, the average person should not visit the sick room of the sufferer. Certainly, if space requirements are ample, the well and the ill should occupy separate sleeping quarters.

"However, in spite of caution or because of lack of it, one should become a victim of an affection of the influenza class, the first safe step is bed. It decidedly will not pay to temporize. The 'Only a cold' psychology, illogical at all times, certainly has no place in such a situation.

"The second step is promptly to call a physician. Everything, needless to say, must have a beginning. And frequently the early stages of an influenza infection do not cause particular discomfort to the victim. But it is foolish to wait until a well defined blaze has developed, when one is already aware that something is smoldering. Therefore fight it with early and proper treatment before its power has developed.

"The third and final step is to restrain one's enthusiasm over an apparent recovery. Many persons make the sad, and sometimes the fatal mistake, of concluding that they are well simply because the acute stage of the infection has passed. The fact remains that the one of the peculiarities of this type of disease is that actual recovery is slow, and the possibilities of a relapse greater than exists in many other maladies. Therefore, let care and carefully directed caution be your guides."

Game Prosecutions

Officers of the Game Commission reported 335 prosecutions for violations of the game laws during January. The total is more than 200 below that for the same month last year, but is attributed to a more prompt handling of prosecutions brought during the big game season.

Sees Elk Herd

Game Protector William J. Davis, of Clearfield, recently reported having seen a herd of approximately 15 elk while he and Assistant Game Protector Philip Sloan, of Cambria county, were patrolling along the McGeorge Road. Attempts will be made to secure some good motion pictures of the herd.

Accidents Decline

The number of hunting accidents increased somewhat during the last deer season, which brings the score to forty-six fatal and 211 non-fatal accidents. The total fatalities are under that of 1929, when fifty-three persons were killed and 210 non-fatal accidents occurred.

So Much Difference

There are so many, many people with colds nowadays that the following is very much in order: When he gets a cold she prescribes and provides: A complete rest with meals in bed. Hot drinks, baths and water bottles. Quinine, aspirin and flannels. When she gets a cold, he says: "You ought to do something for it."

One of our local politicians told me Monday that elections and weddings are exactly alike—the best man never gets the job.

A fellow was hurt in an auto wreck recently. The State cop, who investigated, was asked if the man was badly injured. He said: "Two of the wounds are fatal but the other isn't so bad."

Nature is certainly grand and here's my proof. Of all the funny looking and other kind of people in the world, any of their lips will fit. Now ain't that, sumpin'?

One of our barbers claims that flappers have their domes shingled to prevent leakage.

Love and sausage are exactly alike because both are full of mystery.

I'm beginning to think that money spent on permanent waves is money squandered. Who on earth sees the curls in these days of short dresses.

A WISE OWL

Polly Acted as Peacemaker

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

POLLY, you're just wasting your breath. I simply won't have any thing more to do with Tom. Edith's cheeks were flushed and her eyes shimmered.

"Well, I think you are acting like a narrow catty girl. You know very well how much Tom loves you or he wouldn't have asked you to marry him."

"Then he's got no right to make engagements with a girl he was engaged to before. She's probably just come on East to make up to him and vamp him—even if she is married herself. Tom should have called me first, instead of just telephoning me to say he had made an engagement for tonight and hoped I would dot up in my sweetest of gowns and meet his old friend, Susie. Well—I won't, so there!"

"But Edith, Susie's husband is along. It was just to be a happy foursome."

"Yes with me palmed off at hubby so that Susie and Tom can talk of the dear days gone by. Nothing doing. Susie can have Tom."

Polly stood up and pulled on her chiffon scarf.

"I'm sorry you couldn't have hidden your jealousy," she said, "and you have hurt Tom to the quick. He was so proud of you and wanted to show you off, but—perhaps in time you will see things in a broader light."

Polly went home and tried to shake Tom's troubles from her shoulders and also tried to be a bit fair to Edith.

She had scarcely sat down to pen down love affairs in general when the telephone rang.

"Polly, this is Tom again. You can't do anything with her, can you? You're a good sport for trying. I wish you wouldn't mind my asking you to be Edith, just for this evening."

Polly gasped. "What good would that do?"

"As a matter of fact, Polly, I hate having Susie know that I am engaged to a girl who won't meet her. She's one of my boyhood friends and it hurts to have her see me in a mess like this. It would be all over my home town and people who don't know Edith would get the impression that she's just narrow."

"I'll be glad to help you out, Tom," said Polly. "I'll doll up quickly and you can call for me at seven. Ta, ta."

Susie and Susie's husband proved most charming and there was not the slightest doubt that they, too, found Polly charming.

But then who wouldn't? Polly's eyes were a mixture of mauve and deep blue and her lashes long and upturned. She was gentle and apparently much in love with Tom. Tom would have been only too pleased to have had greater possession of Polly during the evening but Susie's husband saw to it that no such thing happened. In fact Tom felt something like a thundercloud enveloping him as he watched Polly and Susie's husband having dance after dance to gather and having no thought for anyone but themselves.

Susie glanced amusedly at Tom's troubled eyes. "Tommy, Bert is just doing that to tease you and to give us plenty of time to chat. We love each other so dearly that we couldn't even think of any one else seriously." She put a sisterly hand on his. "Don't be jealous—jealousy breaks up many a happy love affair. Susie's a perfect darling, Tom, and you see—she's not even caring how much you and I are together. She trusts you—you must do the same. She's worth it."

Tom smiled suddenly and returned the pressure of Susie's warm fingers. "I'll try not to be jealous and perhaps, since you like Polly so much, we may stop off at Cedar Rapids on our honeymoon and visit you. How's that?"

"Polly," said Tom, an hour later, when he had Polly tucked carefully beside him in the taxi homebound home. "I told Susie that I would bring you out to visit them on our honeymoon."

Again Polly gasped. "Edith and I are not exactly twins," she told him. "How will you explain. I'm sorry, as personally I think Susie and her husband are both perfect dears. I wish they lived in the East so that I could make friends with them. I do think, Tom, you might have been a little more thoughtful of Edith. If you had telephoned her first and asked her if she wanted to make the engagement, she might not have felt as she did. You must remember Edith is a wee bit jealous, but that is not unnatural."

Tom heaved a sigh. "I suppose you are right, Polly, but I can never love Edith now."

"Why the—now?" questioned Polly and kept her voice from trembling though her heart felt suddenly like bursting into song.

"Because, dear, I love you. Will there be any chance in the world—Polly," he cried. "There must be a chance—I don't think I could live if you love any man but me. However," he laughed triumphantly and folded Polly into his arms. "I'm not going to kick in and I have already promised Sue—you know."

"We couldn't disappoint Sue," Polly said happily.

ADVERTISING

Advertising and not competition is now the life of trade, according to the advertising experts who met to attend the International Advertising Association convention. The delegates at this meeting heard a number of interesting things. Among these was the statement by Charles Stelzle, New York expert, to the effect that if churches do not advertise their "ware"—spiritual upbuilding and moral betterment for both the individual and humanity—they cannot hope to arouse interest among the masses and fulfill the obligations placed upon them as parties to the general spiritual movement.

Another speaker declared that "advertising is greater than any single moral force we know of today. Advertising brings about changes for the betterment of life itself, changes which fuse into the social and political life of the nation."

It is now generally admitted by economic forces everywhere that advertising is the most important development of modern business. And it is also coming to be realized that newspaper advertising is the best kind of paid publicity. In the convention just mentioned the delegates who were advertising experts, agreed that newspaper advertising affords the best publicity medium for the churches and all church activities.

Advertising is no longer a theory.
It is a science. And it pays.
