Born In County

The donor of the Hatfield Home, Mary Florence Dffenbaugh, was born at Anchor, a little hamlet a short distance east of Elizabethtown, February 10, 1872, the daughter of Wm. A. and Lucie Fleming Dffenbaugh.

Early in life her disposition acquired for her the reputation of being a "little mother" among her fellow students at the Fairview school Mt. Joy township, where she received her early education. That same impulse led her to select nursing as a profession and when she was twenty-one years of age she entered training at the old Blockley Hospital, Philadelphia, now the Philadelphia Hospital.

After graduating from that institution she became head nurse at the Municipal Hospital, Philadelphia. Tiring of hospital work she took up private nursing in Lancaster where she became prominently known in her chosen profession.

One of her patients was Benjamin C. Hatfield, scion of an old and revered family of Chester county, who fell in love with her.

About this time Miss Dffenbaugh was elected first matron of the Long Home, a home for aged women, which position she filled for some years.

However, within a few years she married her former patient, Hatfield. They took up their residence in Mt. Joy where, a few years later, Mr. Hatfield died.

THE HOME FOR CONVALESCENTS

hundred and eighty-six persons have been cared for at the home which opened in 1926.

On Brandywine
The Hatfield Memorial Home is situated along the banks of the famous and picturesque Brandywine creek in West Cain township, Chester county. A large lake formed by a dam which in early days was used to impound water for the wheel which in turn supplied power for the old Hatfield forge but which now is used to provide power for a grist mill on the Hatfield estate adds greatly to the scenic beauty of the environment.

The building is steam-heated, electrically-lighted and has an adequate water supply on all three floors and basement. There are spacious porches, a sun parlor, reception rooms, library and a music room containing a piano and radio. The dining room is especially well furnished in every particular. Guests are afforded every convenience and courtesy and a home-like atmosphere is evident on every hand.

Here guests are admitted for an initial period of two weeks which period may be extended if, in the judgment of the management, it is desirable. Under the terms of Mrs. Hatfield's will, guests able to pay for their maintenance and care are expected to make such payment (from one to twenty dollars) but those who are unable to pay are welcome and receive exactly the same cordial treatment as those who pay.

Everyone works at her own needs. There is no sentimentalizing but real sentiment. Your physician has recommended you to the home and you go there to rest and be part of the little community. That's the way it is. You wait on your-self—none of that millionaire staff. Of course there is somebody to make beds and clean rooms, but there isn't anyone there to wait on you hand and foot. They just make things generally comfortable and let you do as you like—and what and who couldn't get well in an atmosphere like that?

Miss B. C. Shirk, Lancaster, is superintendent. Miss Shirk has supervised the home since 1928.

sions, men, women and children—who may be convalescing from serious illness or operation; no patients however, to be received who shall be suffering from any incurable, contagious or malignant disease, and patients to be maintained and cared for only until they, in the judgment of the Board of Trustees or those in charge of the Home, have sufficiently recovered to no longer require the care of the institution, and no person shall be admitted to said institution who shall not have been a resident of Lancaster or Chester county for at least six months immediately preceding the date of such admission.

"It is my intention that the Board of Trustees shall in all cases determine the amount to be charged such patients as may be able to pay for their care, but that no one otherwise qualified for admission shall be refused the care of the Institution by reason of inability to pay any such charges."

"It is also my desire that, as nearly as possible, an equal number of patients shall be received into the Home from Lancaster and Chester counties."

At or about the time of the filing of the Executor's account, the Orphans' Court of Chester County, under the provisions of Mrs. Hatfield's will, appointed Horace A. Improve Apple Trees Undesirable varieties of apples can be improved by grafting scions from good known varieties on them. Whip grafting or tongue grafting is recommended by Penn State fruit specialists for top working young trees or for root or stock grafting.

Treat Mares Right
To get live foals treat the brood mares right. Feed them properly and work them carefully, say horse specialists of the Pennsylvania State College. Well-balanced rations that contain considerable bulk are essential for health.

Feed Legume Hays
Successful livestock feeders have found legume hays superior to other hays in quantity, quality, and palatability of protein, and in lime content. For dairy cows an abundance of home-grown legume hay provides a basis for an economical ration.
