OWL-LAFFS

O. W. L.
(On With Laughter)

Did you ever see anything funnier than a man wearing a straw hat and carrying a bucket of coal. Of course springtime nearly always comes ahead of Spring.

Two employees of a local industry were discussing working conditions. One said he favored a five day week while the other wanted a 5-day week-end.

A little girl at Florin asked her mother when the stork brought her to mother and the reply was on the 15th of May.

The little girl said: "Ain't that funny, that was on my birthday."

A man in town advertised in a magazine for a wife and got 113 replies. They all read: "You can have mine."

The other day the trolley stopped at a certain street crossing up town and when they were ready to go the conductor yelled toward the rear end, "All right back there?"

A certain colored lady said: "Lard sakes no. Wait till I gets my clothes on."

Just about the time everybody in the car craned their necks expectantly, the colored lady got on the rear platform with a basket full of laundry.

A certain fellow in town was out playing golf Sunday. When he got home his wife said he was trying to get the canary and the cuckoo clock to sing a duet.

Then there was another golf nut who was so tired that he went to bed without his supper Sunday night. The game certainly has some of the most peculiar effects on some people.

A fellow came into my office swearing to beat the cars the other morning. He said the electric current was off for several hours and he had no hot water, heat, electric lights, ice or radio in all that time.

"Ain't it awful?"

"Robin" Fenstermacher says you can never tell how much a fellow has traveled by the various labels on his suit case.

Just before he went to work the other morning a Marietta street man's wife said: "Is it true that money talks," and he replied, "Yes."

She said: "Well I wish you'd let a little here for me today. I do get so lonely."

The other day a fellow came up street and said he was going to Mar's Specialty Shoppe and buy a cover for his typewriter.

I said: "Why, she sells ladies' wearing apparel," she replied, "Well."

Met a little chap coming up street crying the other day. I inquired what it was all about and he said: "He, with a lot of boys, were playing North Pole and that because he was the Eskimo they made him drink a pint bottle of cod liver oil."

We have a chap living here who declares that Adam was created first just to give him a chance to say something. What a wife that guy must have.

Two local colored fellows in a very heated argument. One said: "Nigrah, does you know what I done wish? I done wish dat Henry Engle's hotel yonder had a thousand rooms in it, and that yew wuz laid out daid in e'vy room!"

A fellow up at Elizabethtown tells me he now has a good way to get his sox darned regularly. He told her the girls at the college opened a mending shop and he'd take them there. It worked.

Just Duck the Squirrels
Don't worry if your job is small, And your rewards are few; Remember that the mighty oak Was once a nut like you.

One of our local school pupils was asked: "When water becomes ice, what is the greatest change that takes place?"

"The price," came the reply.

Charles Eshleman, secretary of the Fire Co. and one of the most active firemen we have, came running down the street early yesterday morning, coat on his arm. He ran across the Market street bridge to the fire house and went along back with the apparatus, only to find that he ran over the fire. Ain't that sumpin'?

HEALTH TALK

WRITTEN BY DR. THEODORE B. APPEL, SECRETARY OF HEALTH

"Less than two years ago, the average American citizen was not particularly interested in the price of an article. His main ambition at that time was to make as much money as he could, as easily as possible. And with the gold spreading 'bull market' he made out very well indeed—until the bull turned," said Doctor Theodore B. Appel, Secretary of Health, today.

"Then when the squeeze came the true value of the real dollar manifested itself with a very painful punch. So today, quite unlike his counterpart of twenty-four months ago, the American is looking with strained eyes for his money's worth. So hard has he been engaged in this optical pursuit, that the dollars he was still fortunate enough to possess at the time of the break took on too much glue, and thus sticking illogically in his pockets helped to cause the great depression which now appears to be definitely receding.

"It therefore seems probable that in the very near future, with both attitudes toward money passing away safely in history, the normal conception of a dollar's worth no more no less for a dollar, will again develop.

"This fundamental economic principle can and should be applied to the question of summer vacations. No matter how much or how little currency one is planning to spend upon his annual sojourn, the real concern should be that one gets his money's worth out of it.

"And this is quite impossible to do if the individual is prodigal of his vitality up to vacation time. The average two weeks at the shore or mountain can do much for one, provided he behaves sensibly on the visit, but it decidedly is not enough time to permit nature's reconstructive processes to make a thorough job of it.

"Therefore, in order to cash in on the vacation it becomes necessary to give some thought and consistent effort to the subject weeks and even months before the excursion. One should start building up his constitution now by daily taking long walks in the balmy spring air, by giving his body the nightly rest it needs, by eliminating devitalizing habits and excesses of all kinds; and in short, getting as much out of nature as is possible for him to obtain.

"Thus charged with vigor, vim and vitality through the simple process of living strictly according to the fundamental laws, the vacation will put on the finishing touches to a degree impossible under the popular method of starting on the pleasure trip more or less 'a wreck'.

"The above suggestion has everything to commend it. It is basically, economically and humanly sound. Why not try it? Get your dollar's worth on this year's vacation by investing in health now. And thus perhaps discover for the first time in many years what it means really to live."

"Public health officials can and do accomplish much. But unfortunately there seems to be a more or less general attitude that health problems are exclusively governmental in their interest. As a matter of fact, the individual is and always will be the key factor in the nation's health official activities in many instances being quite secondary," said Doctor B. Appel, Secretary of Health, today.

"To prove this statement one has but to mention diabetes, heart affections and cancer—all of them demanding individualistic interest in bodily health if the consistent rise in their death rates are to be curbed.

"By the same token, sanitary conditions in and about the premises of a householder are a matter for personal rather than public concern. But this fact in no wise lessens the importance of the matter.

"Public nuisances can be effectively controlled by law. Garbage disposal, sewage, pigeries and stream pollution come within the purview of officials. However, with these things properly supervised, the work of the health boards ends and that of the individual begins.

"Housing experts working in large and small cities have indicated that the winter's collection of fly breeding material to be found in the back yards and cellars is by no means limited to the more crowded sections. They state that a large number of prosperous people who are particular concerning their front yards, are careless where the backs of their domain are concerned. Then too, because of the lack of regular garbage and trash collections in rural districts, many residents of small towns are prone to be indifferent to the proper disposal of the winter's ofal.

"It would seem that appearances alone would prompt many of the thousands now derelict in these matters to clean up, but apparently not being sufficiently impressed they permit matters to slide and thus extend an open and exceedingly welcome invitation to the common fly, that destroyer of infant life and potential spreader of typhoid fever.

"The fly despite its harmless appearance is a real enemy to man. It breeds in filth, exists in filth, lives in filth and then spreads its filth over foodstuffs and in milk. The best defense against it is cleanliness. With the fly-breeding spots eliminated, the fly itself can not come into being.

"Therefore, swat the fly before it exists, by removing the possible

MAN IS SHOT AND DIED AT HOSPITAL

to a place known as the "Silver Slipper" Inn, situated in a secluded spot, a short distance off the Marietta pike, near Chickies, George Seeman, proprietor.

Dr. Gray had been called there about an hour before and found Bollock on the floor, with blood streaming from the abdominal wound. Still conscious he told what had happened.

He said he with Seeman, Frank Rutter and George Keagle, were together in a room when Tracey walked in, whipped out a revolver and ordered them to "put up your hands" and backed them against a wall. Then, the wounded man said, Curtis, whom he described as being crazed by drink, began firing promiscuously.

Bollock said he "took a chance," walked towards the door with the intention of fleeing, but as he moved towards the door Tracey without warning whirled around and fired at him. He was only a few feet away. The ball entered the lower left side of the abdomen.

The other three men, who will be held as material witnesses, corroborated the story, the police said.

Realizing the gravity of Bollock's wound, Dr. Gray rushed him to the hospital here and then called the officers.

When they arrived at the Inn, which once was a grain mill and which since the advent of prohibition has been the scene of numerous rows and once yielded a giant whiskey still, they were told that Tracey was hiding.

An extensive search led them to a dark dungeon-like cellar where, with the aid of flashlights, they found Tracey crouched in a corner. Described as a desperado and one who on previous occasions caused police trouble, the officers found Tracey strongly resisting arrest. He fought desperately, they said, and once whipped out the gun, which was empty.

After being overpowered and cuffed he was taken to an auto. Again he resisted. In the scuffle Officer George Smith was bitten once on a finger and Officer Joseph Smith stopped a hard blow with his ribs. He later underwent an X-ray to determine whether any ribs had been broken.

Tracey was charged by Officer G. Smith before Justice Bruner B. Stevenson with felonious assault with intent to kill and was later taken to jail. The officer took possession of the gun.

Bollock, a World War veteran who recently received his bonus money, is married and has three children. They reside near the Lavoine Furnace at Chickies. He is the son of Jacob Bollock, a Rapho township farmer.

The murder victim had a colorful World War record according to an honorable discharge which stated he enlisted in 1915, served overseas from December 24, 1917 to April 19, 1919, and participated in the most important conflicts of that war including: the battles of Verdun, Chateau Thierry, Soisson Paut a Maussion, St. Mihiel, Blancmont and Meuse Argonne.

Besides his widow, Mrs. Emma Frances Bollock, formerly Emma Eddy, the veteran is survived by three small children, Martha Elizabeth, 9; John Free, 7, and Minnie Viola, 2, all at home.

One sister, Minnie, wife of John Rooter, Marietta, and one brother, John Free Bollock, of Valentine, Montana, together with his father, Jacob Bollock, of Marietta R. D., also survive.

With the sudden death of Bollock on Sunday in Columbia hospital, a charge of murder was formally lodged against Curtis Tracey in the Lancaster county jail.

"Did he really die?" Tracey asked the officers in a bewildered tone when Constables George and Joseph Smith served a warrant issued to them by Justice B. B. Stevenson.

"Was it really that bad?" he continued after they broke the news to him in his cell. The word struck him like a blow, the police said. They left him in a remorseful mood.

GAME COMMISSION ADDS 5517 ACRES

The Board of Game Commissioners recently completed the purchase from the Central Pennsylvania Lumber Company of 5517 acres of land in Pleasant Valley and Clara township, Potter county, and extending in to Annin township, McKean county. In making the announcement, W. Gard Conklin, chief of the bureau of referees and lands, stated that the tract is in the heart of ideal deer, bear and other game territory and is a valuable addition to the Game Commission's holdings. The tract has been designated State Game Lands No. 59. For the present the entire tract will remain open to lawful public hunting.

The Game Commission's holdings now aggregate 240,705 acres distributed in thirty counties of the State.

Plant Seeds Right Depth

As a general rule, small seeds like lettuce, onion, carrot, radish, and spinach are planted one-half to three-quarters of an inch deep. Large seeds like beans and corn are planted one to three inches deep.
