Willows Aid In Retaining Soil

Cut a small twig from a willow tree in the spring of the year, plant half its length in moist soil, and you can feel assured it will grow, Deputy Secretary John W. Keller of the Pennsylvania Department of Forests and Waters today advised.

Willows are widely known for their peculiar ability to grow from cuttings and they serve as excellent soil binders because of their ability to grow and thrive not only in wet situations, but also on dry locations, and to put forth a mass of interlacing penetrating rootlets. On areas where soil erosion or water-out are feared willows should be planted to bind and hold the soil.

Farmers' meadows, through which brooks flow and overflow their banks and wash away the soil during abnormally heavy storms may be prevented from eroding if willow cuttings are planted along the banks of the streams. In addition to the value of the meadows in preventing soil washing, cattle find relief in the shade of willows on hot summer days.

Another method of preventing erosion on steep banks of lakes and river shores is by laying willow poles in shallow trenches, five feet apart along the bank and parallel to the water, with a buffer wall of willow logs, held by willow posts at the water's edge. Sprouting of the logs and posts begins during the first spring, and eroded areas so treated may in a few years' time be changed from banks of bare gravel or sand to a living retaining wall of willow.

Deputy Secretary Keller pointed out that this same procedure had been followed successfully in the treatment of steep banks and slides planted in the spring and retained along highways. Willow cuttings, held in place by willow posts, will have put forth shoots one to two feet high and a binding root system. The planting of willows should be done early in the spring before the buds begin to develop. The cuttings, which should be one to three feet long, are planted in the ground almost their entire length with the tops up. The reason for the deep planting is to produce a willow stool, grow a straight stem, lessen the tendency to branch, and afford ample provision for the formation of an abundant root system.

White willow makes the best cuttings. Black willow should not be used. The distance they should be planted apart depends upon the purpose of the planting. If soil binding along banks is the purpose, then spacing the willows two feet apart in rows the same direction from each other would not be too close.

Rats Cost Millions Annually

You can rid your premises of these costly pests without danger to poultry or domestic animals by using Maro, a Red Squill preparation. Red Squill is recommended by the U. S. Department of Agriculture in farm bulletin No. 1538, as being taken readily by rats and relatively harmless to human beings and domestic animals.

Not a poison

Rats cost the American people $200,000,000 annually. They distribute the virus of plague, of hydrophobia, of trichinosis, of equine influenza. When you can be rid of these pests by using Maro at a cost of 50 cents, can you afford to have them?

Maro carries a positive guarantee. If used according to directions, your money will be refunded if Maro does not kill rats and mice.

At Farrowing Time

Reduce the richness and quantity of the sow's feed by at least half 24 hours before farrowing. For the first 24 hours after farrowing, do not feed but give plenty of lukewarm water. After the first day feed a small quantity of a light slop of shorts or middlings and the same feeds that were given before farrowing. Gradually increase the feed, adding some corn to the ration about the third or fourth day. When the pigs are from 10 days to 2 weeks old the sow should be on full feed, and in addition to pasture, she should have all she will clean up twice daily. Corn or ground barley may be the main feed, supplemented by shorts or middlings, tankage or fishmeal, or old-process linseed meal.

This is the week of the Reading Fair. The straw hat season ended yesterday.

Select Seed in Field

Seed corn selected from the standing stalks will yield better than that picked from the wagon box or crib. Field selection permits the picker to observe the position of the ear on the stalk, the size of the plant, and other conditions of growth.

Treat Seed Wheat
To control stinking smut of wheat clean seed should be planted. If any traces of smut are found the seed should be treated with two and one-half ounces of copper carbonate dust per bushel. The seed has been carefully cleaned.
