ELIMINATES DUST

Mousekeeping Lightened by Modern Types of Heating, Cooling Plants.

STREAKS and smudges on the walls adjacent to the warm air grilles through which warm air heating systems deliver heat into rooms are un. warranted, says the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich., and there is no need for unsightliness in this particular, for modern air-conditioning systems humidify the home air and by washing, eliminate practically all of the dust that may be in it.

Home owners should understand, says the Institute, that it is impossible for dust, smoke, or grime of any sort to find its way into the living quarters of a home through the heat or cold-air ducts of a well constructed warm-air heating system. Likewise, it is impossible for smoke or dirt from the heater itself to get into the heating chamber and thence into the house. About 50 per cent of the winter household dust filters into the cracks around doors and windows. As it. floats in the air it is caught by air currents. The strongest currents are immediately at the face of the grille. and the dust is impacted against and adheres to the wall, continually contributing to the density of smudges. Were basements frequently cleaned,

The daily dusting is eliminated by home air-conditioning systems, the largest type of which wash the home air, removing therefrom 98 per cent or more of the dust.

source entering upstairs rooms. Ordinarily, about 25 per cent of the household dirt comes from unclean basements and careless firing. Chimney drafts should be open and checks closed when coal is placed in furnace, to prevent smoke and gases belching into basement. Register box and frame of the grille should be tightly sealed into the wall to overcom smudging from this source. The best means of eliminating basement dust lies in keeping basement clean, and more care in firing. Another way of keeping down house hold dust, aside from the constant use of the dust cloth or dust mon lies in keeping the house air adequat moistened during the heating seaso Dust is increased in the average be the air is suitably moister dust accumulations from hous ects are reduced to a minimum and es moisture laden, and sinks to floor. Adequate moisture is eco nically and automatically supplied home air-conditioning systems of e vapor air type. These are equipped with a humidifier which receives a ontinual water supply direct from the house main, thus assuring the evap oration of sufficient water each day to overcome the moisture deficiency of winter air. Housewives will find that adequately moistened home air will contribute largery to reducing the burden of housework, and preserve the cleanliness of walks and woodwork. Rooms Evenly Heated Uniformity of indoor temperature during the heating season at floor, head and ceiling levels. As one of the important benefits derived from recently perfected home air conditioning systems, points out the Holland Institute of Thermology, of Holland, Mich. That this is a big step forward to complete home comfort is patent states the Institute, when one considers that in the typical home warmed by old style heating systems, room temperatures at floor and ceiling may vary as much as 20 degrees Air-circulators, an integral part of these nome air-conditioning systems keep the indoor air in constant vet draftless motion and thoro: thly diffused thus obviating the common condition of cold floors and over-heated head room

Draft Defined A draft is air in motion that removes heat from the body faster than bodily near is normally dissipated, according to the Holland Institute of Thermonolgy, of Holland, Michigan. Obviously, points out the Institute, a lesired condition is that wherein the ir is in constant motion, yet not of sufficient velocity to create a drafty condition for anyone. Home air-con itioning systems now available are which maintain the air in sufficient office to prevent air stagnation ar t concentration, yet the air is not I sufficient velocity to can
