

THE WREATH

George Washington

(From page one)

p. 12) (State Society of Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Pa., February 22, 1912).

His Personal Triumph

Then came the horrors of Valley Forge and of the winters in Morris county. Those were the days when deserts were many and enlistments were few, when Washington dared not give open battle and there was hardly any present ability to believe.

When I recall Washington's calmness in the midst of exasperating annoyances, his unselfish loyalty when surrounded by cupidity and jealousy and hatred, his faith that put courage into the hearts of men who marched hungry and left bloody footprints in the snow; when I remember how after eight years of this and more he emerged victorious, as calm in victory as he had been serene in defeat, I do not wonder that Frederick the Great is said to have pronounced George Washington's campaign in the Jerseys the most brilliant in military annals (Barton, William E.—George Washington, pp. 70-72).

Shared Men's Sufferings

Washington did not leave his men to go home to live in luxury, but stayed to endure privation with them. Only he who reads his letters written during these trying times can appreciate his troubles and anxieties. (McLaughlin, Andrew C.—History of the American Nation, p. 168).

Behold him (George Washington) in 1773 taking leave of his family and his home, and hastening to the relief of a distant and then unknown part of America. See him transforming and cementing a band of rustics into an army. Follow him to the field of battle, and see him first in danger and last out of it. Go with him into Valley Forge, and see him sharing the hunger, the cold, the fatigue of every soldier in the camp. Was there ever such fortitude in adversity? Was there ever such moderation in the hour of victory? (McMaster, John B.—History of the People of the United States, Vol. I, p. 465).

Washington's Victory

On only one point did there seem to be unanimity and accord. That was that the dogged prosecution of the war and the ultimate victory must be credited to George Washington. Others had fought valiantly and endured hardships and fatigues and gnawing suspense, but without him, who never wavered, they could not have gone on. (Thayer, William R.—George Washington, p. 128).

The American revolution from a military point of view was a group of little wars rather than a single war. The one integrating force was the person of the great commander, but George Washington held the army and the cause together by his exhaustless patience and courage rather than by any comprehensive plan of war. (Muzzey, David S.—History of the American People, p. 130).

To Washington no duty, however obscure, was unimportant, and no deviation from duty, however trifling, was possible. Hoar, George F.—Washington, p. 31). (Chicago, February 23, 1903).

Put Patriotism First

Washington was an inimitable patriot. He was one of the few rich men who was not a Tory. A very large proportion of men of large means sided with the British crown; nor must we too hastily condemn them. But Washington, who had more to lose than almost any other man in the thirteen colonies, was not blinded by vested interests, nor bound to conservative action by his wealth and station.

For the sake of the country which he loved he suffered innumerable hardships, was stung by ingratitude and hurt by slander, but he stood firm in his loyalty to the cause he had espoused, and was faithful to the end. (Barton, William E.—George Washington).

There is a life that is worth living now, as it was worth living in the former days, and that is the honest life, the useful life, the unselfish life, cleansed by devotion to an ideal. There is a battle that is worth fighting now, as it was worth fighting then, and that is the battle for justice and equality. To make our city and our state free in fact as well as in name; to break the rings that strangle real liberty, and to keep them broken; to cleanse, so far as in our power lies, the foundations of our national life from political, commercial, and social corruption; to teach our sons and daughters, by precept and example, the honor of serving such a country as America—that is work worthy of the finest manhood and womanhood.

The well educated are those who see deepest into the meaning and the necessity of that work. Nor shall their labor be for naught, nor the reward of their sacrifice fall them. For high in the firmament of human destiny are set the stars of faith in mankind, and unselfish courage, and loyalty to the ideal; and while they shine, the Americanism of Washington and the men who stood with him shall never, never die. Van Dyke, Henry—The Americanism of Washington, pp. 70-72).

Man of Firm Friendships

The chief thought that runs through all the sayings is to practice self-control, and no man ever displayed that more difficult of virtues to such a degree as George Washington. (Lodge, Henry C.—George Washington (American Statesmen), Vol. I, p. 51).

Solitude, indeed, is the last quality that an intelligent student of his career would ascribe to him. Dignified and reserved he was, undoubtedly; and as this manner was natural to him, he won more true friends by using it than if he had disguised himself in a forced familiarity and worn his heart upon his sleeve. But from first to last he was a man who did his work in the bonds of companionship, who trusted his comrades in the great enterprise even though they were not his intimates, and who neither sought nor occupied a lonely eminence of unshared glory. (Van Dyke, Henry—The Americanism of Washington, pp. 4-5).

His passions were strong, and sometimes they broke out with vehemence, but he had the power of checking them in an instant. Perhaps self-control was the most remarkable trait of his character. It was in part the effect of his discipline; yet he seems by nature to have possessed the power to a degree which has been denied to other men. (Sparks, Jared—The Life of George Washington, p. 400).

Cover Crops Thrive

Early seeding of orchard cover crops results in larger growth and lower costs, a State College experiment has shown.

Survey Aids In Stream Stocking

CAREFUL SURVEY BY STATE ENABLES FISH COMMISSION TO COMBAT THE RECENT DROUGHT'S EFFECTS

In its survey of the Pennsylvania streams, the Fish Commission has developed a scientific checkmate to drought conditions. Extremely low water during the summer of 1930 and similar conditions last summer resulted not only in the drying up of many small tributary streams, but seriously effected numerous under-ground streams, sources. Only through careful listing of every fishing stream in the state has the Fish Commission been able to combat the drought's effects.

The ability of any stream to sustain fish life may be determined solely by its water area when it is at lowest ebb or during the peak of drought conditions. In larger streams and bodies of water throughout the State, the ravages of the drought, while apparent, still do not materially affect natural cover and forage possibilities. The survey plan calls for four requisites in streams, drought resistance, presence of aquatic life or food for fish, natural cover, and the proper water temperatures. In ascertaining these qualifications, trained men of the commission constantly are conducting a scientific checkup.

Pennsylvania trout streams come under the classification of brook or brown trout waters. Four groups of streams come under the warm water classification. The first group consists of waters adapted to black bass, yellow perch, sunfish, and catfish and having these species. Waters having black bass, pike perch or Susquehanna salmon, yellow perch or Susquehanna salmon, yellow perch, sunfish and catfish are in the second group. In the third group are pike perch, yellow perch, sunfish and catfish, while the 4th classification is for yellow perch, sunfish and catfish.

"The drought in Pennsylvania was serious, not alone in affecting the forage of fish, but also in decreasing their range," Oliver M. Deibler, Fish Commissioner, said today. "This simply means that in limited areas, larger fish devour the smaller."

In making the survey, employees of the commission determine the most practical portions of a body of water for the stocking of any particular species of fish.

The stream survey has greatly increased effectiveness of fish distribution throughout the State, for with the results of the check up as chart, only waters where fish will thrive are stocked. This makes available for such streams many more fish from the State hatcheries each year.

EXPECTS SHIPMENT OF 1000 PARTRIDGES

One thousand Hungarian Partridges are due to arrive from Czechoslovakia here within a few days. They will be released in those sections of the best adapted to these birds. A hundred additional "Huns" were recently received from Canada where they were trapped in a wild state. These birds already have been released.

Hungarian Partridges were first stocked in 1925 and since that time over 13,000 have been stocked although no open season has been declared on the birds yet. Some difficulty was experienced in keeping track of the birds during the first few years of stocking but during the past 2 years and particularly last year, the birds have begun to increase.
