WHEN you are planning the food for your May Day Party outdoors, you want it to be as novel and pleasing to the happy little girl who is Queen of the May, and to her guests, as the surprised little flowers which are peeping out at the new spring. Why not try a new sort of sandwich which is easy to make, nutritious and easily digested? Here is one: Pineapple and Nut Sandwiches: Mix well together two cream cheeses, one-fourth cup drained crushed Hawaiian pineapple, one-fourth cup chopped salted almonds, and spread between thinly sliced and buttered graham bread. Make in required quantities, and be sure to save the syrup from the pineapple to use in a fruit drink. By going to a little more trouble you can make the following dainty sandwiches which will delight the winsome little Queen of the May. Three Layer Sandwiches: Simmer together one cup of crushed Hawaiian pineapple, one-fourth cup sugar and two tablespoons lemon juice until the mixture is thick. Cool. Cut whole wheat or brown bread in very thin slices, butter and spread with softened and seasoned cream cheese. Cover with another slice of bread and butter, and spread with the pineapple mixture. Again cover with buttered bread, and cut into narrow fingers. The acids of pineapple turn alkaline in the body, and its enzyme bromelain content is an aid to digestion, so there will be no aftermath of indigestion to your May Day Party if you serve these sandwiches.
