A Revolution In Home Building

doubt of their relative wastefulness and inefficiency. For example, Committee adoption of the practice of welding pipe would permit the use of the tninner sheet steel and eliminate the laborious hand threading at the site which now raises the cost of plumbing. This practice plus the possible reduction of numbers of pipes, fittings, and fixtures by simplification and standardization, would in the opinion of one contract tor who has installed a great deal of welded piping "reduce the cost of heating and plumbing installations by one-half."

The Committee's analysis take no aspect of the present small house for granted, and concedes no authority to tradition. Beginning with the foundation and cellar and going through the walls and floors and finishes to the roof every feature of the house as we know it is made to answer as to whether present materials and practices are less efficient than others that might be used. As a result, a good many things which we now take for granted are found wanting. The universal practice of fabrication at the site and the use of the sloping roof are alike condemned as costly and unnecessary and practical substitutes recommended. It is definitely shown that some of our present heating practices wasteful and that it is possible to reduce the cost of heating to the home owner and eliminate the dirt and the smoke nuisance. Again it is shown that our methods of garbage disposal are crude and expensive beyond reason.

In short, the committee painted a realizable physical ideal for the small house of the future. It has shown how much of this ideal could be immediately translated into reality and what is still to be worked out. The Committee's report will inevitably serve as an inspiration and a guide to engin-eers, to architects, to builders, and to dealers in materials in the development of the house of the fu-

This final volume of the President's Conference reports, entitled "Housing Objectives and Programs" completes the program, formulated by the Conference at its meeting in Washington last December, to raise the standard of American housing. The volume contains the reports of the six correlating committees whose business was to digest the material assembled by the twentyfive fact-finding committees and to indicate how their findings could be translated into action. The report of the Committee on Standards and Objectives, which was under the chairmanship of Mr. Lawrence Veiller, director, National Housing Association, gives a picture of the quality of housing the Americans ought to enjoy. The statement of the standards reveals how far short of the possible our present housing falls. It also reveals the complex nature of housing-its dependence upon the neigh borhood, the public financing system, and the govern-ment of the community. As Robert P. Lamont, former Secretary of Commerce, says in a foreword, the statement of objectives "once for all proves the impossibility of producing acceptable housing by isolated individual effort."

The reports of the Committees on Legislation and Administration under the chairmanship of Bernard J. Newman, managing director, of Philadelphia Housing Association, on Education and Service, under Albert Shaw, Editor, American Review of Reviews, and on Organization Porgrams, under Miss Harlean James, Executive Secretary, American Civic Association, deal with Kieffer bowled high single and the problem of getting knowledge triple. The score: applied in order that proper standards of housing may be realized.

The first Committee measures the possibilities of law in improving housing, analyzes the weakness of present laws, indicates the need for improvement in administration, and compiles a common sense manual on the drawing up and promo-tion of legislation. It emphasizes however, the desirability of action by extra-legal means, as being both surer and more successful. Its report leads therefore naturally to those of the Committees on Education and Organization Programs, which list the agencies and the methods for molding public opinion and leading it to realize for itself higher standards of housing.

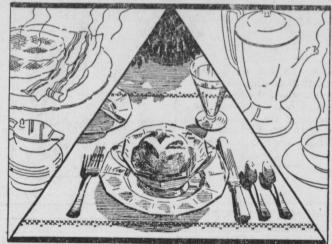

The Committee on Research, under the chairmanship of James Ford Department of Sociology, Harvard University, indicates the gaps in our present knowledge that must be filled if housing is to be all that it ought to be.

Throughout the reports in this volume runs the demand for a permanent housing Institute to inspire and guide the many agencies that must be mobilized if the far-reaching program outlined by the President's Conference is to be put into effect and the ideal for American housing realized.

This volume contains, in addition to the committee reports, President Hoover's address to the ference when it assembled last December, and the speeches of Secretary Wilbur, of the Department of the Interior, and of Mrs. Jane Deeter Rippin, at the closing general session of the Conference.

The eleven volumes of the Conference reports can be purchased for $10.50 a set, postpaid, or for $1.15 each, postpaid, from Dr. Jas. Ford, President's Conference on the Home Building and Home Ownership Department of the Commerce Building, Washington, D. C.

First Wireless Valve

Was Edison Discovery Many years ago Edison was experi menting with electric lamps, trying to discover how the blackening of the inside of the bulbs came about in those of the old carbon type. He found that if a plate of metal was sealed into the bulb and electrified positively, a current passed through the vacuum from the filament to this plate. He noticed that the current always traveled from the filament to the plate: nothing could make a current pass in the opposite direction.

He thought nothing of the discovery, and no use could be found for it, for it was many years before wireless was to be heard of. Before we can hear anything of wireless signals the waves must be rectified. Each wave consists of a push of current in one direction followed by a pull in the other. Rectification means straining out the pulls and leaving only the pushes. All early methods of doing this were complicated and unsatisfactory. Then Prof. J. A. Fleming had an inspiration. He made the first wireless valve in which a filament and a plate were placed in a vacuum inside a glass

The Edison effect was harnessed, for the valve would respond only to the pushes and automatically eliminated the pulls. But for the invention of the valve there would have been no broadcasting today.-London Tit-Bits

Edison Dragged From

Workshop to Wedding Thomas A. Edison was so preoccupied with his laboratory work that he nearly missed his second wedding. This was recalled by Mrs. Franklin Ives, whose father, the late Benjamin Frankli. Card, was associated with the great inventor for more than 30 years, says an article in the Brooklyn

"The story of Edison's second wedding was one of my father's favorite recollections of him," Mrs. Ives said. "Edison was hard at work on a problem in his laboratory just before the wedding. He had become so preoccupied that he had quite forgotten time. "Fifteen minutes before the appointed hour his 'best man' found him there utterly absorbed. He begged the inventor to dress and hurry to the wedding. Edison protested that he was on the verge of a great discovery and couldn't possibly leave. Finally, almost by main force, his 'best man' succeeded in dressing him and getting him to the church-a little late and still preoccupied, but at least acquiescent."
