OUR LINCOLN BOWLERS WIN FROM COLUMBIA

Monday evening on the Lincoln alleys here there was a bang-up game in which the home team won two out of three and a grand total of 2892 to 2866.

A man was caught wandering along the streets at Harrisburg wearing only undergarments, shirt, vest and socks. He was held up and robbed of his watch and clothing.

Lost Property

TOM REYNOLDS was asking Mildred for the umteenth time when she would be likely to make up her mind to marry him and Mildred was smiling very charmingly into Tom's anxious eyes when she suddenly leaned forward and stared at the umbrella in the hands of the man in the seat ahead of them.

She and Tom were sitting on top of the Fifth Avenue bus enjoying the lovely Riverside Drive trip. "Tom," whispered Mildred, "that man has an umbrella that looks exactly like Brother Fred's—in fact," she added, craning her neck a bit, "I am absolutely certain it is Fred's umbrella—the one I had the misfortune to lose when I was in London two years ago. Tom," and Mildred became fearfully coaxing, "do you mind asking that young man where he got that umbrella?"

"Mildred! Have you gone nuts? There are, no doubt, a thousand umbrellas like Fred's." Mildred shook her head. No—I know that is it for the ear of the ivory elephant on the handle was broken just like that, and Fred'd so prize that umbrella. He only lent it to me that day in London because I had on my new Paris suit and he didn't want me to spoil it first thing. I left it on the train and didn't have time to go back and inquire as we called the next day for home. Please, Tom, ask him."

But Tom steadfastly refused. "All right!" Before Tom could stop her she had leaned forward and in the most heavenly voice in the world was asking the perfectly strange man to excuse her being rude but would he mind telling her where he got that umbrella.

The stranger turned and, looking only once into Mildred's eyes, and Tom had a beastly feeling that the game was up.

"Why no," Jim Weldon answered with a ready smile, "as a matter of fact, I got it in London at a small lost property office on the Strand. I rather fancied this ivory elephant."

Mildred laughed. "Well, it's really quite funny," she said, "to see that umbrella again for I lost it on a train in London. My brother lent it to me and I simply felt dreadful when I lost it. We visited England two years ago and—that was when I lost it."

"And I've had it with me constantly for some eighteen months," he laughed.

"You know," confided Mildred, and Tom was beginning to feel quite out of the picture and a bit gloomy, "my brother would give a lot to get that back. His girl, who is now his wife, gave it to him for an engagement present and she has always sort of felt that it was very careless of me to lose it."

Tom felt that the conversation had gone quite far enough now and he didn't like the new and interested expression in Mildred's eyes nor the admiring glances the strange man was giving Mildred.

"Well, he put in a trifle roughly, 'what are you going to do about it?' 'Give it back to its rightful owner,' said the young man rather curtly.

Mildred, too, was a bit snappy. She felt annoyed that Tom could be so petty about nothing at all.

"In fact," continued the strange young man calmly, "if you will give me your brother's name and address I will take pleasure in taking the umbrella to him myself. I'm sure we could enjoy a chat about London, too."

Mildred choked back a desire to laugh. Tom's brow was like a thundercloud.

"No need to take all that trouble," he said with an effort to seem genial. "Miss Caldwell can give it to him."

"Tom! Don't be absurd," flashed Mildred with a laugh. "Don't you see that gentleman could easily think us a couple of crooks. How does he know I have a brother—if he doesn't meet him? I think he is perfectly right in wanting to put it in the right hands." And in order to hide the expression of her eyes, Mildred bent over her vanity bag and extracted therefrom a card on which she wrote the address of her brother. She handed this to the young man.

"Thanks," he said, "and—is there any particular time, Miss Caldwell, when I would be most likely to find your brother?"

Mildred bit her lips hard. She simply dared not show her dimples and her appreciation of the subtle manner in which the young man was asking just when she was likely to be visiting her brother.

"Brother is always in on Wednesday evening," she said.

And Jim elden got off the bus and he looked back for there were those Wednesday evenings to look forward to.

"Lost property isn't the word," growled Tom.

Have You, The "Can't Afford It" Habit?

THE use of that phrase does not suggest the inability to buy so much as the desire to practice rigid economy . . . to save . . . to deny yourself needed and necessary commodities.

But Man, oh Man, and you, too Madam, how better and more effectively can you practice economy and thrift than to buy when prices are at their lowest ebb in years?

How more certainly can you insure economy than to replace worn or out-of-date furniture than when new is selling for one-third of what it sold for 15 years ago? Or to stock up on food products when they are 40% less than at any time since the war? Or clothing when $53 today will buy you what you paid $100 for in 1912?

What you really cannot afford to do is not buy because you cannot afford to miss today's low levels . . . prices that are an actual boon to reduced incomes . . . to the practice of sensible, far-sighted economy.
