Entered at the post office at Mount Joy as second-class mail matter. The date of the expiration of your subscription follows your name on the label. We do not send receipts for subscription money received. Whenever you remit, see that you are given proper credit. We credit all subscriptions at the first of each month. All communications reach this office not later than Monday night. Telephone news of importance between that time and 12 o'clock noon Wednesday. Change for this office not later than Monday night. New advertisements inserted if copy reaches us Tuesday night. Advertising rates on application. The subscription lists of the Landisville Vigil, the Florin News and the Mount Joy Star and News were merged with that of the Mount Joy Bulletin, which makes this paper's circulation about double that of the paper's ordinary weekly.

EDITORIAL

NO MORE "LAME DUCKS" A twentieth amendment was written into the constitution declaring that after this year both the President and the newly chosen Congress shall take office the January following November's election, and that the old time-short session which for so long has clogged the political machinery with its ineffectiveness, shall be held no more. The present one is the last.

DUTY OF A NEWSPAPER The news and editorial departments of the Bulletin are entirely separate and distinct from the business and advertising departments; the old story about advertisers influencing or trying to influence a newspaper has been proven to be untrue so many times that it seems unnecessary to restate it now; the fact is, that there has never been an occasion when an advertiser in the Bulletin has sought to control its news or editorial columns by the threat of withdrawal of patronage. Occasionally, we are asked to withhold printing of news which was unpleasant reading for some family, because of the arrest of some member. To them we have invariably asked the question: "If it were your neighbor in trouble, you would expect to see it in the Bulletin, wouldn't you?" And the reply has always been: "Of course." The paper is not to blame because some boy breaks in and steals, or because some one running a moonshine still is caught; it is largely through fear of the publicity which they know will follow that many people desist from breaking the law. No law abiding man or woman has any fear of publicity.

A NATION MOURNS Calvin Coolidge was a gift from the common people. He rose from the ranks and devoted a life, full of richness, to the service of the people, first of his state and then of the United States. Born on a farm he rose step by step through sheer force to a commanding position as the governor of his own state, and the hand of destiny placed him in the White House.

This government is of one party but when the ties are counted the political ties are obliterated and the successful candidate becomes our president. So it was with Calvin Coolidge. He had the support of those of all political beliefs and he perhaps, more than any other man, sensed during his administration as President, the danger that has threatened the United States in its lavish expenditures both on the part of Congress and in the average American home.

We have always felt that Calvin Coolidge saw the shoals ahead and was trying to steer the ship of the state into calm and placid waters. This country will always honor and revere his memory as that of a man who, plain and unassuming, furnished a true example of that often repeated phrase, that a man can rise to the most lofty heights under our form of government. The nation has lost a truly great man.

A GOOD "HUNCH" About twenty years ago when the editor made a business trip to Philadelphia, he "accidentally" came upon "evidence" that at some time from the then future, electricity would perform a prominent part of the work of transportation. We had a premonition. The week following we published in these same columns, an article stating that at some future time electric cars would replace steam on the railroads. We also stated that the Pennsylvania Railroad would use electric cars for the short hauls from surrounding points to that city. That article certainly made the people laugh. Daily newspapers poked fun at the "humorous article in an up-state weekly" but he who laughs last, etc.

Know What Cow Needs This is no time for guesswork on the dairy farm. The milk from each cow should be carefully weighed at regular intervals and the information thus obtained used as a basis for determining her fate. If feed is good and production low, her removal from the herd will stop a serious loss if production is good, the milk weights are a dependable guide as to the amount of grain she should have.

Keep Ewes in Condition Breeding ewes need some form of succulence, such as corn silage, plenty of water, and sufficient exercise if they are to keep in the best condition. Unless early lambs are to be produced, grain need not be fed until later in the winter if there is plenty of good corn silage and legume hay available.

railroad between the two cities are withdrawn. Although the electric train service is an a two-hour basis, as with steam power, the running time between the two cities is expected to be reduced by half an hour as soon as all passenger trains have been electrified.

BETTER FEELING THROUGHOUT THE LAND No one denies that there is today a "better feeling" throughout the land. If you press an economist or banker or industrialist or merchant or ordinary man in the street to give a precise reason for the faith that is in him, he will confess himself unable to do it. Yet the very lift of sentiment so common as the new year gets under way is really an element of great potentiality for the future. It indicates that the necessary mental change is taking place. Call it blind American optimism, if you will, but it has always had a way of both anticipating what was to come and helping to bring it about. We know that our natural resources are still unboundless, and that our natural endowments and enterprise are unabated. They are only waiting for the upswing which the material at hand is ample to provide for. Our banks stand ready to furnish the sinews of industrial warfare. Banking assets and deposits are merely waiting in leash, as it were, for letting loose a great volume of credit. But the big thing, after all, is the new spirit of hopefulness. It is clear evidence that the needed transformation is taking place in the soul of America. So long as we can be sure of that, and have it to go upon, we can put unfeigned heartiness into our feeling that the upswing has already begun.

Exhibit Dairy Cattle Nearly 400 dairy cattle are on exhibit at the Pennsylvania Farm Show in Harrisburg this week, on January 16 to 20. A feature of this show is 12 county herds and 11 4-H club groups containing animals of four breeds. There are 85 exhibitors from 14 counties in the open classes and 72 exhibitors from 10 counties in the 4-H club classes.

Extravagant, But—

By KATE WILLIAMS

AND he—Mr. Waverly Jones, editorial director of the Stanley Publications—would look at her with searching steel-blue eyes and say: "Tell me all about yourself, Miss Penrose." She wasn't quite sure about the steel-blue eyes.

That would be after she, Alice Penrose, had been admitted to his faultlessly furnished inner office. Mr. Waverly Jones sitting on one side of an enormous glass-topped mahogany desk, and she alert and eager on the other side. Or, perhaps they would be sitting opposite each other at a secluded table at the Metropole, or wherever it was that Mr. Waverly Jones went for luncheon. Mr. Jones' secretary had told Alice to call at half-past twelve. She'd been sitting in the reception room for half an hour.

The letter of introduction from Bert Jeffreys had been very brief—simply telling Mr. Jones that Alice was an ambitious young woman who wanted a job on one of the Stanley publications, and knew what it was all about. Mr. Jones, Alice felt sure, would want to know more about her. At first she had planned to take along her scrap book, containing some of her best fan mail, clippings from local papers, when she had talked to women's literary societies on "The Modern Magazine," a memo of congratulation from her last editor about one of her best captions. But in the end she decided to leave the scrap book at home. She would show it to him another time. More wisely, she had squandered twenty-five dollars on an autumn street dress of the latest mode, and she had come to the Stanley offices straight from a beauty parlor—her cheeks still tingling from the gentle patting and ice compresses of a facial treatment. Not just one of the ordinary two-fifty massages, but the extra special five-dollar kind that made you gasp with joy when you first looked at yourself in the mirror after it was over.

Alice opened her handbag and considered the wisdom of lighting a cigarette. It would help pass the time, but on the other hand it might spoil the perfect line of lipstick deftly applied by the beauty expert.

The telephone had rung on the receptionist's desk. "Yes, she's still here," the girl had said, and then, turning to Alice, "Mr. Jones' secretary says that if you're the young lady Mr. Ben Jeffreys sent up, he wants you to hop in a taxi and go over to Jersey to the printing plant. They're in a terrible rush closing the December issue; they're sending out a dummy with some late revisions. Mr. Jones says for you to get right over there with this revised dummy and then telephone back here to Miss Callum, the editorial department—and she'll tell you what to do."

The boy had come out to the reception room with a bulging pasted-up dummy which he put in Alice's hands. "Mr. Jones' secretary says to keep track of your taxi fares, so you can put in an expense slip," he said.

Printing plant—over in New Jersey—pasted dummies—last minute corrections. For the minute it sounded all Greek to Alice—the girl that Bert Jeffreys had said "knew all about it." Somewhat dazed, Alice took directions for getting to the plant from the reception clerk, and thanked her stars that she hadn't spent her last five dollars for the new hat.

Two hours later Alice sat at a shabby desk under the gray shaded electric light in the printing plant, the corrected dummy before her with memos of still later correcting that she had taken over the telephone from headquarters. The close-fitting long sleeves of her new autumn dress were rolled up to the elbow. There was a smudge of ink on the white satin collar of her dress and another on her nose. She had been too busy to push back the wisps of hair that had strayed down over her forehead.

And then at half-past five the telephone had rung from headquarters. "That will be all for today," Mr. Jones' secretary had said. "The foreman over there and our Miss Callum says you seem to know what it's all about and I guess you do. Mr. Jones hasn't time to talk to you now, but he says you'll report tomorrow morning. He doesn't get in until ten, but I guess you better be on hand at nine. He's decided to take you on."

Use Decorative Plant One of the most attractive plants for the conservatory or window is the Pandanus. It thrives where there is considerable heat and moisture. Side shoots which are often produced on this plant may be cut off and potted in sand to encourage root development.
