OWL LAFFS

BY A WISE OWL

We were talking about dogs the other day when I asked a man if his dog was affectionate. He replied: "I'll say he is. I've sold him three times and each time he comes back to me."

That's the kind the crooked dog dealers should sell. They could keep on selling the same dog time and again.

A lady in town asked her neighbor if their baby boy takes after its father and she replied: He certainly does. When we took his bottle away from him he tried to creep down the cellar steps."

Sixty Groff thinks that George Washington must have had a wonderful memory. He says, "every place you go you see monuments erected to his memory."

A certain store was holding a bargain sale and a woman from Florin stopped to look things over. The only specially cheap thing she saw was three husbands waiting around for their wives.

George Mumper, at Florin, who injured his back while trying to lift a large container of road patching preparation, is off duty but believe me he is making the best of his time. He invented an attachment for mouse traps that will catch flies, wasps, etc. I would suggest you get it patented, George Just heard of a man here who spent $50 for a pair of rubbers once. He had two men massage him.

A lady on West Main Street told her mother that a certain young man sent her some flowers and wanted to call.

The mother, (who must have been jilted in a love affair once, maybe twice) said: "Don't speak of a certain young man. None of them are certain until you've got 'em." Mother ought to know.

"Hey, Bill!"
"What is it?" asked the garage man.

"The doctor's out here with a tire that needs fixin'."

Diagnose the case as flatulence of the perimeter and charge him $5.

Several days ago a chap came to this office, asked for a dollar and said he wanted it bad.

We accommodated him with a counterfeit dollar.

A darkey came into a doctor's office with his face all battered and bloody.

"Were you in an accident?" asked the man of medicine.

"No, sah; hit wasn't no accident, sah," said the patient. "It was done on purpose. Ah jes naturally got beat up, sah."

"Why don't you stay out of such bad company?" asked the doctor.

"Ah can't afford to git er divorce, Doctah," replied the victim.

I've discovered that it is well never to try to show off your radio before company. Pride goeth before static.

I've only ever heard of one case in which a lunatic escaped from an asylum and they didn't try to catch him. He ran away with the warden's wife.

A man and his wife missed the bus for Lancaster Saturday. While standing at the corner of Main and Market she said: "If you hadn't been so blamed slow, we wouldn't have missed it."

He replied: "Yes, 'en if you had not hurried me so, we would not have to wait so long for the next one."

It's a real pleasure for mothers to tuck their children in bed, if they can wait up until the children get home.

Trouble seldom comes to those with plenty of hard work to do.

Be Kind To Animals Anniversary

Societies, individuals, groups, junior organizations—all who have an interest in animals, their welfare and proper treatment—should take part in "Be Kind To Animals Week." This is one week in the year when the friend of the animal can stand up and be counted. The society that concerns itself directly with animal welfare is the pivot for activity all over the country during this week, and in Columbia, we have one who has been outstanding for her interest in the welfare of these friends of man, Mrs. Harriet Heineman, an officer in the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Lancaster County.

Mrs. Heineman broadcasts addresses over stations WEEU and WKJC, during the week, as she did last year.

Who of us would wish to be deprived of his memory of animal friends? To many, such memories are a heritage, indeed, as with them are associated some of the dearest and most blessed experiences of childhood. Who is more to be envied than the happy, carefree boy romping with his faithful dog, or the little tot as she fondles her gentle kitten? Charming as children are, their lives are not quite complete without the companionship of affectionate animals.

None need be ashamed to admit his love for his animal friends. What a glorious company he is in! Daniel Webster, showing his cows to a friend who visited him, said he would rather be there with them than in the Senate—that he found it better company!

Going back to the first century, A. D., we find the Greek historian, Plutarch, saying "A good man will take care of his horses and dogs, not only while they are young, but when old and past service.—Were it only to learn benevolence to human kind, we should be merciful to other creatures. For my own part, I would not sell even an old ox that had labored for me."

General Grant was so fond of horses, that when he became president he surrounded himself with no less than a hundred of them. General Sheridan rode a brave steed, called "Black Horse," thru all his famous raids and battles which he refused to part with, but cared for tenderly till the horse died many years after the war.

The poet Byron found his firmest friend in his Newfoundland Dog, on whose monument he had inscribed: "To mark a friend's remains these stones arise."

I never knew but one, and here he lies."

General Lee's fondness for animals included cats and dogs as well as horses, but his favorite was "Traveller," seldom free from the saddle during the last year of fighting, for whom the great Confederate leader held an intense affection.

Robert Burns, who wrote so many poems treating with unsurpassed sympathy of animals, thought so much of his horse "Maggie" that he addressed a New Year's greeting to her.

If we could only see how far reaching in its influence upon human character and the very life of the nation this humane movement is, that pleads for kindness, compassion, justice toward all that lives, we should honor it with a nobler regard and a more generous support.

Bolted the Bow-Wow

Hot-dog sandwiches were provided by the rector at a party given to the old women of his parish. The donor noticed one of his guests removing the sausage and leaving the bread. Finding herself observed, the old lady said: "Ay, rector, I've etten the dog, but can't manage the kennel."—Boston Transcript.

"THAT LITTLE GAME"—MAKES 'EM ALL HAPPY

A Bird Neighbor

One of our feathered friends seem to be almost necessary to complete an ideal summer evening. This bird, well known, and often seen—yet a stranger as compared with other birds when it comes to close observation, is the Nighthawk, the ace of the upper air.

The Nighthawk, often confused with the Whippoorwill, of which it is a close relative, usually arrives in this section about April 25, and may be seen sailing around high in the air over towns or country uttering its one and only note, a loud and rather discordant squawk. The bird is of a mottled grey color but may be easily recognized while flying, by a round white spot on the under side of each wing, which some people think is a hole in the wing. It flies mostly in the evening or early morning, or on cloudy days and does much of its resting during the heat of the day.

This bird has one habit not possessed by any other birds, which it performs during the breeding season, in the month of June. The bird will rise in the air to a great height, then suddenly by holding its wings in a certain position, drop rapidly to within a hundred or so feet to the ground; this drop causes a booming noise which sounds like the effect produced by one blowing in the bung hole of an empty barrel.
