

FOR YOUR INSPECTION

The merchant and manufacturer who advertise, actually are placing their merchandise before you for inspection. They invite your most critical attention and an uncompromising comparison.

And their advertisements, so to speak, say to their products: "We have introduced you to the public—now stand on your own merits."

If the manufacturer and merchant did not have confidence in their wares, they would hesitate to call attention to them. For advertising rigidly tests the maker, the seller and the merchandise.

Business so tested, and found not wanting, is prosperous.

In the long run, you can depend on the man who advertises, as well as on his product. That is one reason why people have found that it pays to read advertisements.

It is through advertising that the excellent things of the world are brought to the attention of those who are seeking for the best and most economical way to spend their money.

Read the advertisements. They are news.

Catching the Bus

By JANE OSBORN

WVU Service

DAISY DREW turned the corner where the state highway crossed Main street in Hinton and drew her neat little car to the curb. Then she swung lightly from her seat and walked rapidly round the car, glancing at the tires. As she passed the tires on the left she glanced with seeming nonchalance across the street. It somewhat disconcerted her that the tall young man was looking intently at her when she looked intently, but quickly at him.

She took time enough in starting to glance again at the young man who had remained in the region of the corner opposite. She started her car deftly, made a quick sharp turn and then drew up beside him on the opposite corner.

"I'm afraid you've just missed your bus," she said. "There isn't another for half an hour. I'm going out that way and I can easily overtake the bus that you've just missed, if you like." The young man doffed his hat and bowed with more of a flourish than was usual among the young men of Daisy's acquaintance, stepped forward and assured Daisy that it was absolutely essential for him to get the bus and that he would be grateful to her if she would take him to a point along the highway where he might overtake it.

"My name is Schuyler Wentworth," said the young man. "I am a stranger about here—I'd come out to look over a bit of property—which I find is located in—in—at the other end of the bus line."

"Barnbury," supplied Daisy. "Well, that's a half hour by motor—must be more than an hour by bus. I'm quite sure we can catch up with the bus, if you don't mind a little speed." "Not in the least," assured the young man.

They started at breakneck speed, but as they went on, getting fruit for conversation out of the objects they passed on the road, Daisy found herself slowing down. Of course, there wasn't the slightest chance that she would catch a bus, because the last bus had gone nearly an hour ago and it was within five minutes' time of the next when she kidnapped the good-looking stranger at the corner. It had been a rather bold thing to do, Daisy admitted—and not the sort of thing that her sisters would have considered even decent. As a general thing, Daisy agreed with them—it wasn't safe to pick up strange young men and take them driving along the country highway to Barnbury—but the young man sitting beside her in her car was decidedly prepossessing, and if he by any chance was a desperate and dangerous character Daisy felt that in an open car with the wheel in her own hands she had every advantage over him.

Barnbury was in sight—and the bus had not been overtaken. It was a little settlement of some eight or nine houses, two gas-filling stations, a little store and the remains of an old wooden church. The young man had indicated that he had business in Barnbury. Obviously there was not much business to be done there.

"Here we are," Daisy told him. It was a desperately bold thing to do, but she told him that if his business wasn't going to take very long she would wait and carry him back to Hinton, assuming of course that he wanted to go to Hinton. But the young man did not even get out of the car. He looked at her contritely and explained that as a matter of fact he had no business whatever in Barnbury. To his surprise the girl at the wheel showed no sign of resentment. They drove back to Hinton in silence that became mutually embarrassing.

"I take it for granted that you want to go back to Hinton," said Daisy, with an arch little smile. "Perhaps you have friends there?" "Not unless I might count you as a friend," said Schuyler. "The fact is I had never heard of either Hinton or Barnbury in my life until this morning. I was motoring from New York to Ohio and this morning I found myself in Hinton with some slight engine trouble which I could not attend to. I left my car in a garage and started for a stroll. That was when I saw you—you apparently thought you had a puncture."

"Really, I didn't," said Daisy. "I only stopped my car because I thought you looked—well, a little different from the men we meet here."

"And you don't exactly hate me because I let you think I was trying to get the bus?" said Schuyler.

"Oh, I knew you weren't trying to get the bus. Only at the time I couldn't think of any better excuse to talk to you."

Daisy took her eyes from the road ahead of her long enough to look at him with a little pout of annoyance. "And I suppose you'll start right on your way as soon as we get back to Hinton?"

"Not if you'll let me stay—and—and get a little better acquainted. As a matter of fact there isn't anything the matter with my car. I just left it there. I had seen you earlier in the day as I came into Hinton, and I made up my mind that I wasn't going to leave the place until I knew you better. I think it was a case of love at first sight."

"I can't tell you how glad I am that you feel that way about it," said Daisy. "I'd hate awfully to feel that way about it all by myself."
