

FOR YOUR INSPECTION

The merchant and manufacturer who advertise, actually are placing their merchandise before you for inspection. They invite your most critical attention and an uncompromising comparison.

And their advertisements, so to speak, say to their products: "We have introduced you to the public—now stand on your own merits."

If the manufacturer and merchant did not have confidence in their wares, they would hesitate to call attention to them. For advertising rigidly tests the maker, the seller and the merchandise.

Business so tested, and found not wanting, is prosperous.

In the long run, you can depend on the man who advertises, as well as on his product. That is one reason why people have found that it pays to read advertisements.

It is through advertising that the excellent things of the world are brought to the attention of those who are seeking for the best and most economical way to spend their money.

Read the advertisements. They are news.

Advertising Pays
The farmer plants his seed and while he is sleeping the corn is growing. So with advertising. While you are sleeping, eating or conversing with one set of customers, your advertisement is being read by hundreds of persons who never saw you or heard of your business and never would if it had not been for your advertisement appearing in this paper.

Burn Peony Refuse
State College plant disease specialists urge growers to remove and all the dead tops and stems of peony plants to check the ravages of blight. Where the blight has been severe it will pay to remove the top inch or two of soil under the diseased plants and replace it with soil where peonies have not grown for several years.

Feed Needy Bees
To provide warmth in cold weather the bees form a tight cluster and through physical activity convert honey into heat. If food is short the bees should be fed sugar syrup made by dissolving 2 1-4 parts of granulated sugar in 1 part of water. The syrup should not be boiled.

Grade Fuel Wood
Grading of fuel wood for kind and size is important. If the customer wants one kind of wood the load should not be mixed with some other species. Some hardwood species are twice as desirable for heating as soft woods.

Reduce Garden Insects
Fall plowing of the garden will help to cut down the insect population of 1934.

SLIMMING DIET
Here is a other of the weight reducing menus prepared for this paper by Dr. Shirley W. Wynn, Commissioner of Health of New York City.

Adjust the diet to your needs by taking smaller or larger portions of the food indicated in plain type. Do not change the quantities of the foods in bold face type. These are the protective foods, and must be taken as indicated.

BREAKFAST
Orange Juice 100
1 egg 100
1 slice of toast 50
Coffee (milk instead of cream) 50
We suggest 3

LUNCH
1/2 cup fruit salad 10
dressing 20
1 glass of milk 150

DINNER
1/2 cup cream of celery soup 100
2 codfish balls with 2 1/2 t. p. tomato sauce 200
 salad (1/2 cup grated raw beets with 1 tsp. bellied dressing—oil) 150
1 slice watermelon 150
1 glass of milk 150

Don't try to reduce too fast. A quarter of a pound a day is enough.

At Her Best

By ALICE DUANE

"WELL, I just won't go," Hot, rebellious tears stung Lynn Atwater's big gray eyes. "I won't go. I can't go!"

She glanced again at the letter in her clenched hands. It was from her aunt. Aunt Matty, Lynn had to admit, was doing her share of things—cooking and sewing, cleaning, washing and ironing, for Lynn's younger sister and brother. No matter how much money Lynn could give her, she could never repay Aunt Matty for the love and attention she had given Betty and Jack.

Aunt Matty never fell down on her job. Lynn kept up her end, too. She sent every cent she could spare to the little country town where Aunt Matty and the youngsters lived. But what is a good income for one isn't a very adequate income for three. It took a lot of scrimping on Lynn's part to keep Betty and Jack going, even with Aunt Mary's generous help.

The letter in Lynn's hands, beneath its amusing recital of family doings, showed real need for more money. Jack was growing so fast that he was just walking out of all his clothes. Lynn wrote Aunt Matty. They were cutting in the kitchen—the dining room ceiling was cracked. Mr. Mitcham, who had come to look at it, had said it must be replastered.

Well, thought Lynn, Aunt Matty had always had enough to live nicely and keep her little house in beautiful condition. She must be spending heaps on Jack and Betty—she was, of course, in spite of the best Lynn could do.

So she wouldn't go. It all came back to the same decision. She couldn't go. And probably she'd live, and live, and then die, an old maid.

For weeks Lynn had been saving a bit here, a bit there. Enough, she had hoped, so that she might accept Elise Carlton's invitation to a house party in August at her father's Adirondack camp. Elise had been one of Lynn's friends at college. It seemed strange to Lynn that Elise still had another year of college before her. In her holidays at home, this last year, Elise had looked Lynn up and had entertained her at dinner several times at her Park avenue apartment. There Lynn had met Barton Stark. And Elise had said, Barton was to be a guest at the same house party to which Lynn was invited. Barton was good looking, rich and about thirty, with charming manners. He had showed interest in Lynn. But he had never looked her up. The thought of meeting him at Elise's house party had helped Lynn through the hot, grinding work of July. And now she couldn't go. Even if she let Elise buy her railroad ticket—and Elise had put the thing so tactfully that Lynn could hardly refuse—she must have money for clothes. Now she knew there would be no money for clothes, and that the house party was off, with all its possibilities. She sat down and wrote two letters—one to Elise, saying that her vacation plans had interfered with her holiday duty; she had decided she just must spend the whole of her short two weeks in the country; the other letter to Aunt Matty, enclosing a check for all her saved-up vacation money. "And be sure you have the new collar up by the time I come home. I've decided to spend all my vacation with you," she added, "and I'd hate to have the collar fall on my head."

The rest of the summer was insufferably hot to Lynn, without the alluring prospect of the house party before her. And the night before her vacation began—Friday night—she felt utterly discouraged and unhappy. She was pressing and packing such shreds of a wardrobe as she had, when her doorbell rang.

She pushed the button that opened the front door, and then waited impatiently at the head of the stairs for her visitor. And there, bounding up the stairs, was Barton Stark.

The shabby little room disappeared—for Lynn, Barton saw it, in all its significance. But in its midst he saw Lynn, flushed and tremulous as she welcomed him, trying not to show too great surprise and pleasure.

"You see, I was at Elise's camp," Barton talked in a practical, matter-of-fact voice, and gradually Lynn's embarrassment disappeared. "And I expected you were coming tomorrow. But she told me you weren't coming. So here I am!"

He walked over to Lynn's one window and gazed from it as if it had looked out over a beautiful garden or the sea instead of a cluttered city.

"It's a lovely night," he exclaimed. "Let's go have dinner now. Then you come back and finish packing and get a good sleep. And in the morning let's motor up to the country—Elise told me where your family lives—all about them. Is there any sort of a hotel or inn there?"

"Oh, yes!" breathed Lynn. "Quite awful Mrs. Mitcham keeps it. The White Horse. But it's clean."

"Well, I'll stay there. And every day we'll see each other and we'll motor to the youngsters and your aunt around a lot—would they like that, Lynn?"

"Oh, yes!" "And—Lynn, would you?" Lynn's face suddenly lit up with a smile. "You're asking me?" she retorted.

Balance Rations Pay
In a comparison of balanced and unbalanced rations cows receiving the former in an 18-week test gave an average of 10.65 pounds of milk a day per cow over the cows getting the unbalanced ration. At present prices the extra cost of the balanced ration would be 3 or 4 cents per cow each day.
