POULTRY

FRESH RANGE FOR GROWING TURKEYS

Poultry Expert in Warning Against Blackhead.

When young turkeys have reached the age of from eight to ten weeks, move them out to range shelters on clean ground which was free of all poultry, turkeys or poultry manure during the previous year. A good range will afford plenty of green feed, shade and fresh clean water.

At this season of the year, growers usually begin to have trouble with their poultry, says C. F. Parrish, poultry extension specialist at North Carolina State college. "Blackhead begins to develop and this comes, in most cases, from laxity in sanitation. Success with turkeys is dependent upon careful management of the growing points. Fresh range is essential."

Parrish says much attention must also be given to supplying the right kind of feed. In general, poultry have the same nutritive requirements as chicks. A complete growing ration is necessary for best results. Such a ration will include animal protein, grain, milk, green feed, minerals and water. Milk is useful during the first six weeks.

The same commercial feeds recommended for chicks may be used with poultry. However, one mash hopper five feet long is needed for each 75 poultry. Two one-gallon water fountains are also needed for this number of the birds. Place the mash hoppers and water fountains on wire covered frames made from 2 by 4 timber.

It requires about 60 pounds of feed, exclusive of green feed, to fulfill the requirements of a poult during the first seven months of its life. By that time, the poult should weigh from 12 to 14 pounds. Always keep turkeys and chickens separated, he advises.

Variety to Choose From in Finding Good Layers

The selection of a breed is often perplexing to a poultry novice. Usually the poultry enthusiast does well to select the one that most appeals to his own fancy. The lightweight Mediterranean breeds are primarily adapted to egg-laying. This class includes eleven varieties of Leghorns, five of Minorcas, Single and Rose-comb Anconas, White-Faced Black Spanish, Blue Andalusians and Buttercups. The American class contains the middleweight breeds that are admitted to the American standard of perfection are seven kinds of Plymouth Rocks, eight of Wyandottes, Black and Mottled Javas, Single and Rose-comb Rhode Island Reds, Rose-comb Rhode Island Whites (Single Comb Rhode Island Whites were not admitted to the standard because of a too close resemblance to White Plymouth Rocks), Buckeyes, Chanteclers and Jersey Black Giants. The Asiatics appeal to many fanciers on account of their large size and profuse, soft feathering. The standard lists three varieties of Brahmas, four Chinese, Black and White Langshans. The English division includes three kinds of Dorkings, four of Orpingtons, three Cornish, three Sussex, besides the Australorps developed from English Black Orpingtons in Australia.

Sand for Young Ducks

To hatch a brood of ducks with a hen has always been an interesting stunt with young poultry keepers. The ducklings themselves are most engaging in their ways, and the concern of the mother hen over their taking to the water is amusing. In many cases the pleasure of the owner is spoiled by what seems an unaccountable mortality among the ducklings. Fed the same as young chickens they are apt to collapse within a day or two. The common cause of this is that the feed is too rich for them. They are voracious feeders, and when they fill up with a grain mash are apt to have acute indigestion. The usual method of preventing this is to put coarse sand in the mash the first few days. A good big handful to a quart of mash is sufficient. Mix thoroughly and let the ducks eat all they want.

RULES FOR A LOAFER

- 1. Don't bother to come to school on time; the late car isn't so crowded.
2. Make use of the walls; they were built to hold you up, not the school.
3. Don't speak distinctly; no one wants to hear you.
4. Don't get to class on time; the tardy room would miss you.
5. Don't bother studying; a "D" will fill up the space on your report card as well as an "A".
6. Don't trouble yourself to answer long questions; it's much easier to say, "I don't know."
7. Stop and talk in the passageway; others like the tardy room, too.
8. Don't pick up paper about the building; it's decorative.
9. Don't put paper in the wastebasket; the desk where you're sitting is more convenient.
10. Don't forget your chewing gum, it adds to your personal appearance.
11. Don't bother to drag around a pile of books; the one you want is probably in the desk where you're sitting.
12. Slouch way down in your seat; it's a most graceful pose.

IF YOU WANT GOOD TEETH - By DR. J. M. WISAN Chairman, Council on Mouth Hygiene, New Jersey State Dental Society

TAKE CARE OF CHILDREN'S TEETH

"THERE is no time in the life of the individual when dental care of the most thorough and the most painstaking kind is more definitely indicated than during the formative periods of a child's life." These words were expressed by Dr. McGonigle at the recent convention of the New Jersey State Dental Society.

He then quoted a statement of Dr. W. T. McFall, one of the leading editors of dental periodicals, as follows:—

"The individual dentist is doing more to hurt and hinder the progress and glorious possibilities of mouth hygiene and children's dentistry by his indifference, his continuous failure to do his work well, his unpardonable lies to parents and children than is any other agency. Such lies as: 'The first teeth are not important,' 'It is not necessary to fill and save baby teeth as they will shed anyhow,' 'abscessed teeth are not a probable source of trouble to children,' 'the six year molar does not need to be filled, it will be all right to wait until the cavity becomes larger, the tooth is not through growing yet.'"

Dr. McGonigle's report made such an impression on the State Board of Trustees that it was suggested by the authoritative body of the New Jersey State Dental Society that these facts be brought to the attention of the public. Of course, the dentist who is cognizant of his responsibility to his young patients will advise their parents to treat dental defects during the early stages. He will insist that his patients eat a well balanced diet including milk, fruits, vegetables and other healthful foods. He will give to the "baby teeth" the same careful attention that he gives to the second or permanent teeth. He will not neglect infected teeth and thereby risk the possibility of systemic disease. It is gratifying that a vast majority of modern dentists are aware of the needs of their patients and provide scientific dental treatment. The dentist who misleads his patients should be avoided by intelligent parents. Insure mouth health by eating proper foods, practicing mouth cleanliness and obtaining prompt dental care.
