

You Can Depend On The Man Who Advertises

NINE times out of ten you will find that the man who advertises is the man who most willingly returns your money if you are not satisfied.

He has too much at stake to risk losing your trade or your confidence. You can depend on him.

He is not in business for today or tomorrow only—but for next year and ten years from next year. He knows the value of good will.

You get better merchandise at a fairer price than he could ever hope to sell it if he did not have the larger volume of business that comes from legitimate advertising and goods that bear out the promise of the printed word.

Don't miss the advertisements. This very day they call your attention to values that tomorrow you will be sorry you overlooked.

OWL LAFFS Thursday Is His Birthday

Since his death on December 12, 1799, the nation remembers him by that immortal epitaph: "First in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

The Death of George Washington

On the morning of December 13, 1799, General Washington was making some improvements in front of Mount Vernon. Although it began to rain and sleet, he kept working. When he had finished, he took great care to prevent a cold by changing his clothes, but still he was overcome with nausea about one o'clock.

In the evening, the General complained of a slight illness, and after drinking one cup of tea he went into his library. Before retiring he did not take anything for his cold because he thought it should go as it had come.

That night was spent in fever and pain. At daybreak a vein was opened by the overseer, but it gave no relief. Dr. Craik was immediately summoned but could do nothing. The other physicians who were summoned were also unsuccessful.

On the evening before Washington's death, the weather was very cold. The family was gathered near the couch watching for some sign of improvement. When the family servant asked him how he felt he answered, "I am very ill." He then called Mrs. Washington to him and said, "Go to my desk, and in the private drawer you will find two papers—bring them to me." She brought them and he continued, "These are my wills; preserve this one and burn the other." This was immediately done.

After Washington's friend, Lear, went to his bedside and took his hand he said, "I find I am going. My breath cannot last long. I believed from the first that this illness would prove fatal. arrange and record all my late military letters and papers. Also arrange my accounts and settle my books." Washington then asked if there was anything else to do for he had a short time to live. He looked to his death with perfect resignation.

About five o'clock Dr. Craik came into the room and the General said, "Doctor, I die hard, but I am not afraid to go. I believed from my first attack that I should not survive. My breath cannot last long." The doctor was very much grieved and could not say a word.

About ten o'clock Washington made several attempts to speak but failed. At length he said to Lear, "I am just going. Have me decently buried. Do not let my body be put into the vault in less than three days after I am dead."

Ten minutes before he died his breathing became easier. Lear took his hand and pressed it to his bosom. Dr. Craik put his hand over his eyes because Washington had passed from this life without a sigh.

When Mrs. Washington had learned that her husband had died she said: "This well. All is over now and I shall soon follow him. I have no more trials to pass through."

Insects are Destructive
If it were not for the use of insecticides it would be impossible to feed the world as it lives today, according to Dr. Henry C. Knight, of the Department of Chemistry and Soils. It is estimated by the Department of Agriculture that the annual loss caused by insects to growing plants averages 10 per cent of their value. Loss to forest trees alone is estimated at $100,000,000; loss to livestock caused by flies, gnats and larval forms account for another $100,000,000, destruction to stored fabrics, grains, feed and foodstuffs easily reaches $200,000,000. These losses added to the others caused by insects reach a stupendous total.

Have you heard about the six-day bicycle rider who was arrested for peddling without a license?

I gave my sweetie a bunch of flowers and when I handed them to her I said, "Be careful, darling, they are a little wet."
And she said, "Why are they wet?"
And I replied, "There's still two dollars DUE on them."

A certain old maid finally found a man who took an interest in her—she married an antique collector.

Tomorrow being George Washington's birthday, I cannot tell a lie. The aforementioned old maid was not from town. A WISE OWL

One girl said, "most of us do but you'd better explain it for the benefit of them that have never been inside one."

A man at Lancaster told me that while on a Mediterranean cruise his wife wrote him from every port she touched and touched him from every port she wrote from.

We have some men here in town who have a millstone around their necks caused by the silver fox around their wives' necks.

The French are said to be really grateful over President Roosevelt's Wilson Day speech. Why don't they show their gratitude by paying a little something on account?

Two Elizabethtown business men were lunching together. The first, a disciple of economy, was relating to the other the various economical changes he had made and how much money he was saving as a result.

"Well," finally interrupted the second, "I've been saving quite a bit myself lately. I discharged my blonde secretary and hired a young man at forty-five dollars a week."
"What salary did you pay the girl?" asked the first.
"Twenty-five dollars," the second man replied.

"Where's the saving there?" the first wanted to know.
"Well, I don't have to give so many presents to my wife now."

But here's a conversation that took place at the second man's home just before he fired his blonde secretary. To his wife he said, "Believe me, I've been pinching and scraping at the office."
His wife said, "yes pinching the stenographer's cheeks and scraping the lipstick off our own!".....And so he fired the blonde.

At Philadelphia a week ago last Friday during the wrestling match, Marshall, who was on the mat, said to London, "Say, I want you to help me solve a puzzle."
London answered, "This is no time for puzzles."
But Marshall answered, "Oh yes it is! Which are my legs and which are yours?"

Frank said, "I know, but they're all going to my house."

Until you try to borrow money you never realize what CLOSE friends you have.

And then there was the wife who wanted a divorce with all the trimmings. She wanted to trim her husband out of his car, his country home and a thousand dollars a week alimony.

Met a little fellow sitting on the back porch of his home on Donegal Street and he was crying hard. Wanting to be sympathetic I stopped and he cried, "Boo, Hoo! My daddy's gone away."
I said, "Don't cry, little boy. He'll come back."
And the little fellow answered, "That's just it. He went after a pacifier!"

Or have you heard of the woman whose husband's business kept her in hot water all the time? He ran a restaurant and she washed the dishes.

HEALTH TALK

WRITTEN BY DR. THEODORE B APPEL, SECRETARY OF HEALTH

The diphtheria rate in Pennsylvania has been reduced from 341 in 1906 when 2438 out of every 100,000 persons died from this disease, to 4.0 in 1933 when but 398 out of every 100,000 persons succumbed to this disease. This is but another conclusive indication of the march of progress as it applies to disease prevention. However, responsible for even the present highly reduced death rate, it must be admitted that public opinion unfortunately has not kept pace with scientific advancement," states Dr. Theodore B. Appel, Secretary of Health.

"Diphtheria is a highly contagious and serious disease of the nose, throat or upper air passages. It is caused by the Klebs-Loeffler bacillus—named after its discoverers. The presence of the germ causes an area of inflammation over which a tough grayish-white membrane spreads rapidly. However, the danger in diphtheria is not from the inflammation. The poison which the germs make and which goes all through the patient's system weakens the heart, damages the kidneys and can cause paralysis of various nerves and muscles.

"This disease is spread by infected persons. It is always induced by more or less direct contact with a diphtheria patient or one recently recovered from it. Diphtheria carriers also spread it. Occasionally outbreaks are caused by infectious persons contaminating some food supply such as milk. Incidentally a carrier of any disease is a person who is infected with its germs but who is not sick. After convalescence from diphtheria, a small proportion of persons become carriers.

"If one is unfortunate enough to get diphtheria, antitoxin is the only remedy that can save life. Prompt recognition of the disease and the prompt administration of antitoxin have cut the death rate from 40 per cent to 10 per cent in Pennsylvania. Even this fine record could be made available to all children in the early stages of the disease. By the way, antitoxin never produces paralysis or bad hearts. "Effective as antitoxin may be for treatment, toxin antitoxin is the great preventer. It permanently immunizes. Three injections are made under the skin with intervals of about one week between them. However, it requires from three to four months after its administration for the body to develop immunity.

"The means are at hand to fight diphtheria to the death, but it cannot be done without a hundred per cent co-operation of parents. This yet remains to be accomplished. It is unfortunately the old story of "You can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink."

Golf Balls

A golf ball usually consists of a liquid core (a paste enclosed in a spherical rubber bag) covered with windings of stretched rubber tape and thread, which in turn is covered with gutta-percha or belata. These are molded on in a steam heated press. The ball is pitted (dimpled, brambled or meshed) to give a lift to the ball when hit with a back spin. A difference of 1-1,000th of an inch in the depth of these pits may mean as much as 14 yards variation in its carry or distance.

RECIPES Tried and True

These cold days the family will enjoy the substantial Meat & Dumplings Meal. The following recipe will prove popular. Try it.

MEAT & DUMPLINGS

Cut round steak into small squares and brown in butter. Add water, pepper and salt. Let simmer until tender, then add potatoes cut in slices, then the dumplings.

To make dumplings: One egg, one heaping teaspoon of baking powder, one cup milk; flour to make quite a thick batter. Drop with a spoon.

After the dumplings have been put into the pan (which should be a deep one) the lid should not be removed, else the dumplings will be heavy.

BAKED HAM

Next time you bake ham, select the middle cut from a ham, about 5 inches thick. Remove the fat; chop fine (or grind); add one half cup of brown sugar and spread thickly over the meat. Bake in a covered roaster, in a slow oven.

Is this supposed to be a fast train? The advertisements said it was, remarked the excursionist to the conductor of the Chicago Limited.

Yes, of course, answered the conductor.

I thought it must be, said the passenger. Would you mind my getting off and seeing what it is fast to?

No edicts have ever been quite as popular as those two which we are going in for in a big way this season. The first one orders that necklines should be high... should, in fact, nestle right up under our chins. The second decrees that while our shoulders should not insist upon too much width and interest, a certain lift is not at all remiss. (McCall 7567, below, McCall 7571). The Chinese influence is easily seen in the frock illustrated in a light wool. Its high neckline, pointed sleeves and slim silhouette are easy to wear and extremely flattering. That's one happy thing about the high neckline... it is very becoming to almost every woman. If it is found to be too severe, a bit of jewelry will oftentimes soften its lines. The turtle-neck design and flaring epaulets of the other costume are right up-to-the-minute in their styling. (By courtesy of The McCall Company).
