Fly Is Wonderfully Made:

Eyesight Is Unsurpassed Although a pest, the house-fly is wonderfully made, and when just out of the chrysalis, with the sun gleaming upon its wings, beautiful. It beongs to a class of insects known as the Diptera, which means two-winged flies. If we examine it under a magnifying glass we see that on its head by the are two large compound eyes. This means that instead of having two eyes like most animals, each consists of thousands of tiny lenses. All insects have these compound eyes, and those of the house-fly can be divided up into 14,000 separate lenses. In addition to these, the fly has three more situated on top of its head.

On each foot, and it has six legs, there are two sharp claws, looking, when magnified, like the talons of a bird of prey. With these it is able to walk with ease over any rough surface, but it is also provided with moist pads which assist it to run up a window or wall, or walk upside down on a ceiling. On its pads it picks up and carries all kinds of disease germs.

It has two wings which vibrate at a great speed when in flight. Near the base of each there is a wonderful piece of mechanism, which is really its buzzer, consisting of two tiny drums .- Tit-Bits Magazine.

Sleeping Beauty's Castle The ancestral castle of the Counts of Eltz is in Germany. High on a precipitous rock, rimmed with woods and hills, cloud-reaching with its towers and turrets, it is one of the truest to type, the type that dreamers conceive, when they see ladies fair and knights bold prancing homeward toward the end of a romantic day. The Sleeping Reauty is said to have lived in this castle, or rather that the author of the old tale wrote it after a visit into its grand halls. It dates back to the Twelch century and has seen many a battle waged about its walls. It might almost be said to be three castles in one, grouped about an inner court, and each of the three has its own entrance. Inside the walls are lined with the portraits of ancient worthies, armor and weapons. All the paraphernalla of legend-haunt ed rooms surround the visitor-carved doors, old pewter tankards, heavy iron-bound chests, a wonderful dining hall and a massive table from which venison and wine must have been often taken in marriment

Love Is Like That

66 F I never see you again, Jack Alder, it will be too soon!" The pretty brunette sniffed back the tears -tears of indignation.

"That's O K by me," Jack returned with as much anger as she had shown. "And now perhaps you wouldn't mind going into the house?" His tone was sarcastically polite as he held the car door open for her.

Angelica Rice slammed the front door before her escort could get to the top of the porch steps. And that slam had a finality not to be denied. His ego hurt, Jack swore softly and then winced as he recalled how his fiery little sweetheart had reacted to his accusations an hour ago.

"You-you-" she had cried. "How could you ever believe that-that cat!" She grew stormier-"See here, Jack! If you can't trust me, our engagement is off, understand?"

If he had only had sense enough to keep quiet instead of urging her to say she hadn't dined with Ted.

"You are both too stubborn, Jill," Edith Mason said one day. "You know that Alice is just a jealous little cat. I heard her say once that she'd do anything to get Jack to look at her."

"Well, from reports, she's succeeded," Jill retorted. "They're together everywhere. And Jack doesn't seem to be terribly downcast when he's with "He's just trying to make you jealous, old dear," Edith comforted, "But to get back to the question: you admit your attitude was wrong, even though Jack was unjust. . . "Jack has admitted that he was wrong, too," Jill answered. "Oh, not to me," she put in hastily. "To everyone but me. And now that he's taken up with that trouble-maker." "Call her up, Jack," Ted urged. "You know Alice was just stirring up trouble when she told you I took your girl to dinner. You should know I "Well, if you didn't, she should have said so. If she wants to see me she can call me. I won't give in to her whims. Anyway, she probably wouldn't see me now." His resentment changed to pleading. "But what can I do, Ted?

I miss her like the dickens." "You certainly are the prize chump! Why not try getting Mary Benson's advice if you won't take mine?" Ted asked. "She's a good friend of both your families."

A good looking fellow, if rather sheepish, sat facing his mother's old friend ("Eloise, advisor to the lovelorn") next morning. The office door of the Daily Gazette wes securely closed behind them. "It's this way, Mrs. Benson," he said.

"Day after tomorrow is Jill's birthday and I want to take her out. Can you help me patch things up?" "Leave it to me, Jack," she said.

"Angelica, my dear, how are you? I called to see if you'd come down to the Gazette tomorrow. This year I want you to choose your own birthday present. You've been a slave to my matronly tastes long enough. Could you meet me at lunch time? Maybe I'll be able to get off a little early so don't be

Mrs. Benson was phoning when Jill entered. "I'll be right over," she said hanging up.

"What a shame, Angelica," turning to the girl. "I have to run out for about ten minutes and there isn't a soul to take my phone. Would you mind looking after it until I come back?

"You probably won't have a single call," Mrs. Benson continued, "But if you do, answer as best you can, unless you're absolutely stumped. In that case tell them to call after 1:30. Think you can manage it?" Mrs. Benson looked so concerned that Jill reassured her quickly. When the older woman was gone, Jill felt full of responsibility. The phone bell-"This is Eloise speaking." Jill answered as she was told. "Yes, it is perfectly correct for a girl to answer a boy's friendly letter if her parents do not object to the correspondence." Five minutes, then the phone rang gain. "This is Eloise speaking. . . . She listened to a man's voice saying, My fiancee and I had a misundertanding because of a meddlesome third person. We quarreled, parted and now we've found out that we both were wrong in our attitudes. But neither of us is big enough to call the other. Could you please advise me? I can truthfully say that we are still very much in love."

"The silly fools," Jill thought. Then she replied. "It is a good deal harder for a girl to call a man than the other way around. Put your silly pride aside. I'm positive your former flancee will welcome you with open arms." Jill hesitated, and then burst out, "If you don't do this you two will be as miserable as another couple I know who are too pig-headed to realize how much they really love each other. Take it from me, I know!" Jill could not stifle the sob in her voice, and she hung up quickly.

Two minutes later she was startled as the door rushed open. "Darling!" Jack caught the teary-eyed girl in his arms, "Oh, sweet, I've been such a fool!" he whispered into her curls.
