RISING FLOOD OF TAXATION AFFECTS EVERY INDIVIDUAL

The selling price of any commodity nust cover the cost of producing it. Unless it does the business must fail. Everything that affects prices also affects the consumer. Electric service is no exception to this rule. Too few people realize how much the increasing load of taxes being piled upon the electric utility companies is likely to affect them.

Every dollar added to the tax bill of the utilities means a dollar less for use to meet operating expenses, or interest and dividend payments. Or it can mean retrenching in operation or curtailment of plans for expansion.

Statistics from the electric industry show that it is more heavily taxed than any comparable business. Regulatory measures under which it operates become more drastic each year. The result, it would appear, is that the govsult, it would appear, is that the government is prompting the utilities to Anna E. G. Stehman, Irene Bender, refrain from doing a lot of things which Administratrices of John H. Stehman would contribute materially in speedng up recovery.

Careful management, planning for the future, improving operating conditions, and increasing the consumpn of electricity, have always figured the benefit of the consumers. Confronted with the rising flood of taxation, the utilities are having a hard time keeping their heads above the financial
