Wild Flower Preserves

(From page one)
The preserves should form a nucleus for the spreading and transplanting of wild flowers and transplanting of wild flowers to other localities," Dr. Wherry said. "Wild flowers will sometimes grow to twice their original size in good soil and under systematic cultivation." He suggested that places where water sheds must be preserved as excellent locations for wild flower preserves, and described three large tracts in the state which have been set aside for the purpose, one of which is located near Erie, the second at Hawk mountain in Berks county, and the third at Bowman's hill near Washington's Crossing, where nearly every type of wild flower has been established successfully. He urged the elimination of herbivorous animals, and the preservation of carnivorous animals in the preserves, as the latter tend to keep down rodents which attack the foliage and roots of the flowers.

Established Preserve
Seven years ago when the writer acquired an eight acre tract at the southeastern border limits, now known as the Springs, one of the first moves was to set aside a plot as a wild flower sanctuary. Since then many, many species of wild flowers were gathered throughout various sections of Pennsylvania and planted therein.
Quite abundant in this plot is trillium grandiflorum. This particular flower is indeed very scarce throughout this section. It blooms with white petals and a purple center and while there is also trillium with purple petals, we were not as yet fortunate enough to find any in this state.
The writer, who hunts and fishes for recreation, frequently gets to many out-of-the-way places in woods and along streams and it is then that most of his specimen were collected.

Has Many Trillium
His prize of trillium was however discovered while on a survey. At that time it was being destroyed by the new owners of a tract of land and with the owner's permission, a large number of the bulbs were transplanted at the Springs and have been blooming quite profusely ever since. There are more than 100 of these bulbs and they multiply annually as do gladioli.

Other specimen growing in the above mentioned plot are Dog Tooth Violets, Wild Ginger, Columbine, Blue Bells in blue and white; Grape Hyacinths in blue and white; Shooting Stars or American Cow Slips, Blood Root, Hepatica, Rue Anemone and Wood Anemone, Pink Lay Slipper or Moccasin Flower and other varieties of Orchids, Star of Bethlehem, and many, many other varieties.
There are a number of wild flowers in this collection the name of which is as yet Greek to the owner.

Wm. Haines, Newtown, Is Acquitted

The victims was one of the principal witnesses against Haines yesterday. The youth said his sister, being pushed in a wheel chair, and his brother were run down by Haines' truck near the brow of a hill a short distance from the school to which the children were on their way. John Hecht, Lebanon, who was behind the Haines truck, corroborated this testimony. Both said Haines did not seem to slow his truck or blow his horn as he neared the children.

William Sites, manager of a Pinegrove theatre, and Miss Grove, a Pinegrove school teacher supported Haines in his version of the fatal accident. The three said that Haines' vision had been blocked by two trucks coming towards him. They said one truck was passing the other, and that when the passing truck had returned to the east side of the road, the children were directly in front of Haines on the west side of the highway and he had no chance to stop in the short distance between his machine and the children.
