Common House Fly Lays

Egg That Hatches Maggot The house fly undergoes a complete change of form in its development from the egg to the perfect fly. The larvae of the house flies are popularly known as "maggots." House flies breed in almost any decaying matter of an animal or vegetable nature. Horse manure forms the chief substance in which the larvae are found. and heaps of such manure are the principal breeding places of these in-

A single fly is capable of depositing from 100 to 150 eggs at one time, and five or six such patches of eggs may be deposited during the fly's life. The eggs are oval in shape, one end being slightly broader than the other towards which the egg tapers slightly. They are pearly white in color. In warm weather these eggs hatch in from 8 to 24 hours after being laid. Before reaching maturity, the maggots cast their skins twice. According to the temperature, the maggots may become full-grown in five days. The full grown larvae is a creamy-white, legless maggot. The body tapers off from the middle to the anterior end.

Irish Water Spaniel Is

Dependable Hunting Dog All Spaniels take kindly to water, but for long steady work in chilled waters, wherein other dogs would perish, the extremely tough-coated Irish water spaniel, accurate and almost inexhaustible in this work, wins the assignment. Largest and most hardy of all spaniels, he is among the best gun dogs, a first-class retriever on land, but unexcelled in water.

His peculiar, but honest face, is long and hare of the profuse tight curl that encases his entire body, except for the odd thin tail. Small sparkling eyes, set almost flush and void of eyelash, produce a most charming expression. Though he may provoke a laugh upon first sight, his quaintness and "smart as mustard" gaze will soon win one over to a sympathetic smile. True native of the Emerald Isle, his origin has defied all research. We can but guess that his deep liver coloring came from the Irish setter, his curls of hair, from the curly poodle, and his kind affectionate playful disposition,

He is 50 pounds of quaintness and devotion .- Los Angeles Times

The Welsh Terrier

The Welsh terrier is a small, wirycoated black-and-tan dog, standing not more than 16 inches at the shoulder and weighing about 20 pounds. He has a long head, flat skull that is narrow between the ears, but not as narrow as the fox terrier, getting slightly narrower toward the eye. The foreface should not "dish" or fall away quickly between and below the eyes. Jaws should be strong and muscular, of good punishing power and depth. The ears

Bulbs as Food

Certain types of buds, modified as food storage organs, are items in our own diet. A cabbage head is but an overgrown bud, and the good part of cauliflower is a cluster of flower buds. Jerusalem artichokes and head lettuce are other examples. Cloves are buds used as seasoning. There are under ground buds, called bulbs, whose scales thicken with stored up food for propa gation and for continuing the life of the plant through the dormant period. Tulips and onions are such bulbs.

Wild and Domesticated Dog Of the 200-odd species of wild and domesticated dogs in the world today, one-the dingo of Australia-is found in both wild and tame states. An outstanding characteristic of the wild dingo, a ruthless killer of sheep for sport as well as for food, is his ability to feign death when caught. He will lie lifeless, allowing his captor to maul him unmercifully, until his chance for escape arises. Then away he goes .-Collier's Weekly.

Storks Have Four-Hour Day Members of the Munich Bird Society of Munich, Germany, discovered that when storks fly south to escape the European winter they travel more than 125 miles a day. They fly only four hours a day, spending the other 20 in feeding, resting and sleeping. They average over 30 miles an hour in their flight of thousands of miles over the stork airways.

Much Borrowed Word The word "apricot" comes to us by a strange descent from the Latin meaning, precocious, early ripe. The Greeks borrowed it from the Latin, the Arabic from the Greek, the Portuguese from the Arabic, the French from the Portuguese and the English from the French. It then, after its travels, emerged as "apricock," and finally took

Domestic System of England

The domestic system of England is the name applied to the system of household industry which preceded the factory system. There was little factory work previous to the early Eigh-Park during this season and next Sunteenth century. Industrial projects, day are presenting the Prize winning particularly textiles, were largely manufactured in the homes under the personal supervision either of the merchant or his deputies. Due to this, known black face comedians, Dick, the hours were variable and wages were hot piano accordianist, etc. And don't unregulated. This resulted in a system known as sweating.

"Era of Good Feeling"

The "Era of Good Feeling" in American History coincided with the administration of President Monroe, 1817-1825. During that period party dissensions practically disappeared, and in the election of 1820 Monroe received all but one of the electoral votes. The elector who cast his vote against Monroe said he did so in order that later no man could be said to stand in the shoes of George Wash-
