boylic Biblical association of the component parts lend added interest. According to legend, Spaniards in the 17th century seeing the passion flowers festooned in the trees in South America, were impressed with the arrangement of the flowers, likening their parts to the passion of Christ. They called it "the flower of the five wounds" and regarded it as a token that the Indians should be converted to Christianity.

The ten colored parts of the floral envelope were thought to represent the ten Apostles, Peter and Judas being excepted. The corona of colored fringe of filaments was likened to the crown of thorns, or emblematic of the halo. The five stamens suggested the five wounds, one in each hand and foot and one in the side. The three styles or sections of the pistil represented the three nails one in each hand and one through both feet.

The symbolism was not confined to the flower alone, for in the tendrils the early Spaniards were reminded of the cords or scourges, and in the finger-like five-parted leaves, the hands of the persecutors.

Another species of the passion flower, a vine, having a three-parted leaf was held to suggest the Trinity.

Most passion flowers are from the American tropics and not hardy in this vicinity, but the most common one (Passiflora incarnata) grown wild from Virginia southward, where it is known as "maypop." It may be grown here outdoors if given a well drained soil and some winter protection. It forms a slender herbaceous vine. Incidentally, it was adopted as the Tennessee State flower in 1920.

The passion flower may be grown from seed or one may obtain roots being preferable. In locations of doubtful hardness, and especially for the first year or two, it is well to take the plant indoors over winter, keeping in a cool room and watering sparingly. During summer pot may be plunged in soil outdoors.

Beware of Barn Fires

There is a fire hazard attached to storing chopped alfalfa in barns. Even where fire does not break out, the quality and feeding value of the hay is seriously impaired by high temperatures.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO "BREAK IN" THE FORD V-8

You can drive it 50 miles an hour the day you buy it

THE FORD V-8 is ready for normal driving when you buy it. There is no tedious period of breaking-in for 500 or 1000 miles. You can drive it up to 50 miles an hour the first day. And after the first hundred miles you can drive it as fast as you desire.

The reason for this is as important as the result. The Ford V-8 needs no breaking-in because of unusual accuracy in the manufacture of moving parts and the smoothness of bearing surfaces. Clearances are correct when you buy the car. It is not necessary to depend on a long wearing-in period to eliminate tightness and insure smooth running. Longer life, greater economy and better performance are bound to result from such precision methods. The Ford V-8 gives you finer car construction, along with fine-car performance, comfort, safety and beauty.
