

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

Night Snapshooting With Box Cameras

Thanks to more powerful artificial home lighting, owners of inexpensive slow lens cameras can now make snapshots indoors at night.

ARE you missing the fun of indoor snapshooting at night? Maybe because you have an expensive camera, such as the box, fixed-focus type, you think that indoor picture-taking at night is not for you. Perhaps you still suppose that without an f.8 lens or faster, you have little chance for succeeding, except by making time exposures. Be happy that such is the case no longer. There is now available, for indoor instantaneous exposures in your home at night, a new and more powerful photographic flood light bulb (No. 2), and with two or three of these in your door lamps, backed by inexpensive cardboard reflectors and with a roll of the fast supersensitive panchromatic film behind your lens, snapshots at night can be made even with the slower single lens cameras. The initial investment in these new bulbs is higher but, on the other hand, they last three times as long. So, now that practically everybody can be in on the fun, consider the precious subjects that these more powerful lights permit—a simple box camera to photograph—the children at their evening games or in their nighties going to bed, the family gathered around the fireplace, gay evening parties when friends come in, the pets, Dad raiding the ice-box, and what not. One of the enjoyments of making pictures at night is that you can control the illumination. In doing this, however, care should be taken to obtain the right balance of light. Remember that usually you set a better picture with more illumination on one side of the subject than on the other. Either two flood light bulbs should be used on one side and one on the other, or if only two are used, one should be placed closer to the subject than the other. The light nearest the subject is the main light—the one which produces the high lights and shadows necessary for proper modeling of features. The other is used to balance the lighting—to illuminate features so that they will not be too dark. If this light is placed too close, faces will appear flat and lacking in roundness. On the other hand, if it is too far away, shadows on the side away from the main light will be too dark and the lighting will be harsh. Suppose that you have placed a bulb in each of two bridge-type lamps with the shades replaced by the cardboard reflectors. You will probably get a good balance of lighting by having one lamp about three feet from the subject and the other about four. It is an excellent plan before you snap the picture to experiment with the lamps in different positions, watching the different lighting effects on the face or faces. Always use the largest diaphragm or stop opening. Slow lens cameras having adjustable shutter speeds should be set to take the picture at 1/25 second.

"Jai-Alai," Ball Game, Rivals the Bull Fight

"Jai-alai," better known as "pelota" (meaning ball in Spanish), is a game somewhat similar to handball, which originated in the Basque provinces of France and Spain. In parts of Spain, it rivals bull fights in popularity, says a writer in the Detroit News. Originally "pelota" was played with hand, naked or gloved, or with a stick, but now a stout basket-work gauntlet, called a "cestus" or "chistera" is used. This basket, a Basque invention first used at Ascan, France, revolutionized the game by increasing the propelling power of the players and the carrying force of the ball. The game may be played either indoors or outdoors and requires a cement court, 200 feet long and 65 feet wide, with at least two walls 36 feet high. Four walls may be used. There are usually four players and among the professionals are men who have done little else since boyhood. The ball is of solid rubber, small and weighs about four ounces. During play, the ball is bounded from wall to "cestus" and must be kept in motion. The game is very popular in the Basque provinces, Spain, Cuba and South America. According to the Americana Encyclopedia, "It is claimed for this game that it requires a better eye, more speed, activity and surer control over every muscle of the body than any other sport."

Women's Missionary Society of the United Brethren Church, will be held at the home of Mrs. Perry Bates on Tuesday, February 1st. All members are requested to bring their Thankoffering boxes or send them to Mrs. Edna Hershey Eckinger.

YOU CAN'T BUY NEW EYES!

With the exception of the heart, the eyes work harder than any other organ in your body. Day after day they are constantly on the job for you, taking you up and down stairs, directing you through traffic, steering you through crowded stores. Do you give them the care they should have? Remember, you can't buy new ones. Your eyes should be examined at least once a year. Phone us for an appointment. Lancaster 29713

DRIVERS LICENSE FEE $1 IN 1933

All automobile operators' licenses for 1933 will cost $1 each, Secretary of Revenue J. Griffith Boardman declared today in nailing a rumor that a special charge was to be made for paid operators. "The Bureau of Motor Vehicles has received numerous inquiries from all over the state asking if a special operator's license at a higher fee is necessary for professional chauffeurs, truck drivers or persons driving cars registered in other than their own name, Boardman said.

"According to the rumor which is apparently receiving wide circulation, it is necessary to pay $5 for one of these special 1933 licenses. This rumor is absolutely without foundation. There is no such thing as a paid operator's license in Pennsylvania and there has not been for many years. "The universal operator's license law became effective on March 1, 1924, with the license fee set at $1. Several years later the fee was increased to $2 where it remained until Governor Earle called for the present reduction to $1 which becomes effective for 1933."

DRIVERS LICENSE FEE $1 IN 1933

Boardman stated that applications for 1933 operator's licenses would be mailed out by the Bureau late this month.
