

When Lightning Strikes

IF JERRY HOWARD had not been so altogether good to look upon, so interesting because of his very critical, amused attitude toward life and so adored by the two aunts who had presided over his home since he had been left an orphan at 15, perhaps no attention would have been paid to his lack of interest in girls. Given looks and wealth and youth the public is always annoyed at the refusal of a young man to marry. "We'd like to see your wife in this home before many years. Jerry," little Aunt Lida often said to him as they sat before the library fire after dinner, Aunt Susan busily knitting across from them. "We're getting old and it's silly to pretend we'll be here forever. You need—" "I've got all I need," Jerry protested gaily, kissing her affectionately as he arose to pace up and down the rug. "Don't worry—and don't drag any more girls here, you two frauds! There's been something impossible about every one of the four! Now I come to think of it, the things I most dislike in girls were embodied in those four! The first one simply strewed things all over the place and since I've had years of your orderliness that came hard on me. Another one told me everything I said, did or thought was utterly wonderful, and if there's anything I dislike it's hypocrisy or stupidity. Seems to me another one was boisterous and noisy, and you've taught me to like quietness and peace. But that last one, Laura—" "Any woman," he continued, as he got out a cigarette and lit it, "any woman or girl who deliberately puts on a pink hat tells the world that she is irresponsible to all beauty, and weak and frittering mentality! It absolutely kills attractiveness. Laura was quite nice until she would go and put on that hat of hers, and I always ran when I saw it. I couldn't be happy with a girl who offended me in these ways. I'm far from perfection myself, but I'm selfish enough to want it in my wife."

Oil Chemist Is Helpful In Petroleum Industry

In the rise of the petroleum industry an impelling force has been the modern chemist. The general use of high-compression motors in automobiles, a development of depression years, was only made possible by the chemical improvement and stabilization of gasolines to give them and enable them to retain anti-knock qualities, and to inhibit the formation of gum, writes Dr. C. M. A. Stine in Popular Mechanics. In recent tests motors have been run up to 100,000 miles without having to be overhauled for carbon removal. Cracking became commercially practicable in 1912. Improvements in the process have resulted in sensational increases in the yields of gasoline from crude oils, and have probably extended the life of our oil deposits by many years. Later in 1922 two plants for cracking by hydrogenation began operating in this country. This process makes possible yields of as high as 104 barrels of fuel from 100 barrels of low grades that under old methods yielded as little as five barrels, a feat that sounds like black magic. The rapid deterioration of cracked gasoline in storage now has been eliminated largely by the use of antioxidants which retard gum formation, and high test fuel may be stored for six months or longer as against the one-time limit of two or three weeks. Lubricating oil has been treated chemically and improved through the addition of extreme pressure lubricant bases. This has fitted it for gear loads double and quadruple what the untreated oil of a few years ago could carry, and made possible the use of improved gears, in the transmission of power.

Synthetic Vitamin Opens New Field in Medicine

More extensive use of vitamin B compound for human consumption is forecast in "Modern Medicine," as a result of recent discovery of synthetic vitamin B. Production of the artificial vitamin was achieved by Dr. R. R. Williams, according to the publication. Among other scientists who helped perfect the process, the magazine said, were Dr. J. Cline, Professor H. T. Clarke, Dr. E. R. Buchman and R. E. Waterman and A. E. Ruchle. The process of making artificial vitamin B, the first vitamin discovered, requires the combining of a drug which puts people to sleep with a sulphur-containing substance used to vulcanize rubber. Synthetic production of the vitamin, eliminating the costly and long method of extracting the pure substance from the vegetable in which it is contained, will open a new field in medicine, the magazine predicted. It is effective for the treatment of certain nervous ailments and lack of it causes a dropsy disease known as "beri-beri."

Alaskan Market

Ernest Gruening, director of territories and island possessions in the department of interior, believes there is an unutilized market in Alaska for Eskimo commodities fashioned of copper, ivory, furs and wood, as well as woven baskets. "The native craftsmen to date do not supply the demand," he said on returning from a trip to Alaska, "but under proper vocational guidance they could recapture this socially and economically useful field which belongs to them." Mr. Gruening said that while craft industries were not the chief Eskimo revenue, they were important. Sale of handmade goods enables the native Indians and Eskimos to obtain cash which is used to purchase supplies for fishing and hunting, the occupations which provide their main source of livelihood. Three-quarters of the tourist poles sold to tourists in Alaska are made in the Orient, according to Mr. Gruening, a fact indicating a prevalence of foreign-made goods. He said establishment of native co-operatives would be a boon to individuals and communities.

Discovery of Old Faithful

Old Faithful, Yellowstone National park's world-famous geyser, was first seen by white men on September 18, 1870, according to authentic records. Supposedly exaggerated reports of the marvels of that region had seeped through to the outside world from time to time, but were disregarded until the Washburn-Langford-Doane party was organized to investigate. They were reputable citizens, whose words were believed when upon their return to their starting point, Helena, Mont., they declared the Yellowstone to be "probably the most remarkable region of natural attractions in the world." Today the sight of Old Faithful sending up its column of boiling water to a height of 170 feet at approximately 65-minute intervals is still as magnificent a spectacle as it was to those intrepid explorers.

Women Drivers

Although statistics show that women automobile drivers have fewer accidents than men, the average American would rather ride in a car with a man at the wheel, according to a poll of the American Institute of Public Opinion. The vote was: male driver, 60 per cent; woman driver, 8 per cent; no preference, 32 per cent.
