about lightly, then this matter amounts to something. One leading producer says it is the double feature which has hurt, another remarked that the prizes and gifts and banks that are offered too freely at many movie houses causes the running of poor grade pictures in order to meet the expense. The complaint that the drop was due to weak productions could not hold true with the number of splendid attractions offered the public. Could it be that the cost of seeing many movies has a bit to do with the falling off? Not knowing the finer points of the business we offer this as a suggestion that need not be taken seriously. We were wondering if it wasn't possible to cut down on the lavishness of the sets, the tremendous cost of costuming and all those heavily expensive features in movie-making, of not paying so much for the "back-drops" but still using strong stories and splendid talent and still coming out ahead. Is it that the public demands extravagant displays costing in the millions to produce, rather than have a lower entrance aren't feeling so good!
