Dog's Ears Tuned To Catch Sounds Man Can't Hear

New Type Whistle Calls Dogs Without Disturbing the Neighborhood.

Have you ever heard a dog howl mournfully when certain music was played? No doubt it sounded comical to you but it may actually have been painful to the dog. Here's why. A dog's sense of hearing is much more sensitive than that of human beings. Certain sounds may cause considerable discomfort to a dog's hearing. Music may hit a pitch that causes considerable pain to a dog.

Working on this principle, an English inventor several years ago developed what is known as a silent dog whistle. Only a slight hiss is audible to the human ear but it is apparently loud and pleasing to dogs.

From England this new whistle has been brought to this country. Many have been sold at comparatively high prices. But now, at a nominal price, a domestic silent dog whistle that compares very favorably with the English one is available. It can be had by sending to a St. Louis firm the coupon that comes with the purchase from our local Purina dealer of five pounds of his dry food for dogs—Dog Chow, and the nominal amount asked.

Because the new whistle is designed to command the attention of a dog up to 200 to 300 yards, it is just as useful to hunters as it is to the man who wishes to call his pet dog without disturbing the entire neighborhood. As one man expressed it, he can call his dog in private when he uses his new whistle.

Milk from Farm Grains Increased By Concentrates

Profits are Much Larger from Correctly-fed Herds.

It is a sound practice for a dairy farmer to raise all the feed he can. believes Meade Summers, head of the dairy department, Purina Mills. This applies both to grain and roughages or hay.
He adds, however, that to get the most profitable returns from his herd a dairyman must feed his grain and hay in the most efficient way.
Proof From Iowa State
To prove his contention, Summers calls attention to a statement appearing on page one of a bulletin issued by Iowa State College, "Feeding Dairy Cows." The statement reads—
"In Cerro Gordo County, Iowa, a cow testing association member was feeding only corn and cob meal in December. He changed to a grain mixture which included enough of a high protein concentrate to balance the roughage being fed, making no other changes in the care of the herd. In January his production increased so that the butterfat was worth $54.29 more. The new grain mixture cost $16.92 more than the old one, so that there was left $37.37 worth of butterfat as extra income over December. This is not an isolated case."

Grinding Feed Helps
Summers reports that a study recently made by Purina Mills in the feed stores of its dealers shows that about two-thirds of the folk grinding grain for dairy cattle still fail to appreciate how much more they can get out of it by adding a mixed concentrate. They believe in grinding their grain because their observations have shown them that much whole grain goes through the cattle. But because the loss of milk cannot be seen they continue to feed their ground grain without balancing it with a mixed concentrate.
Summers' recommendation on a mixed concentrate to add to ground grain hinges on the amount of home grown grain the dairy farmer has. When his problem is to make his grain stretch as far as it can, Summers advises the adding of 24% Cow Chow. If the supply of grain is ample he advises the adding of 34% Cow Chow. Both of these mixed concentrates are handled locally by our Purina distributor.
