Here's the latest news flash! "Heck" Muzma's in the green grocery business now. The other night he was over at the fire house peddling oranges. ... Well, I guess it's all right, but I just didn't think Heck would do it.

Yesterday morning a farmer north of town went out to feed his chickens and found them all dead. He was exceedingly shocked and went in to tell the family who were at breakfast. He exclaimed: "They were all healthy chickens, I can't see what happened." Then his eight year old son announced: "Daddy, maybe I know what happened." His Dad asked: "What?" And his son continued: "Well, Sunday's Easter, and we always have to help the Easter Bunny color a lot of eggs, so I thought I'd feed out chickens different colored paints and then the eggs would be all ready colored and save an awful lot of time, but now that they're dead maybe I should've just given 'em water colors."

The honeymoon is over when he discovers he wouldn't have been caught in the draft anyway!

"The movie manager is the father of twins," laughed the usher. To which the usherette grinned, "That'll teach him the horror of double features." ... Well, it oughta anyway.

Well, spring is here, and pretty soon we'll see the screens up and you'll hear some little brat complain: "Eat, mamma, I'm not hungry. I ate all these raisins that were on the fly paper."

Did you hear about the man who smoked so many Camels that his nerves got so steady that he couldn't move?

Joe Detweiler, west end tonorial artist, sure had a swell time on April Fool's Day, with a thread attached to a money bag lying carelessly in the gutter outside his shop. He pulled the old gag on deliverymen, pedestrians, traveling salesmen, bus drivers, etc. Everybody was hoping the boys in the white frost cars would fall for it, but luckily anyway everybody in that neighborhood sure got their share of laughs when someone would stoop to pick it up and Joe would pull the string.

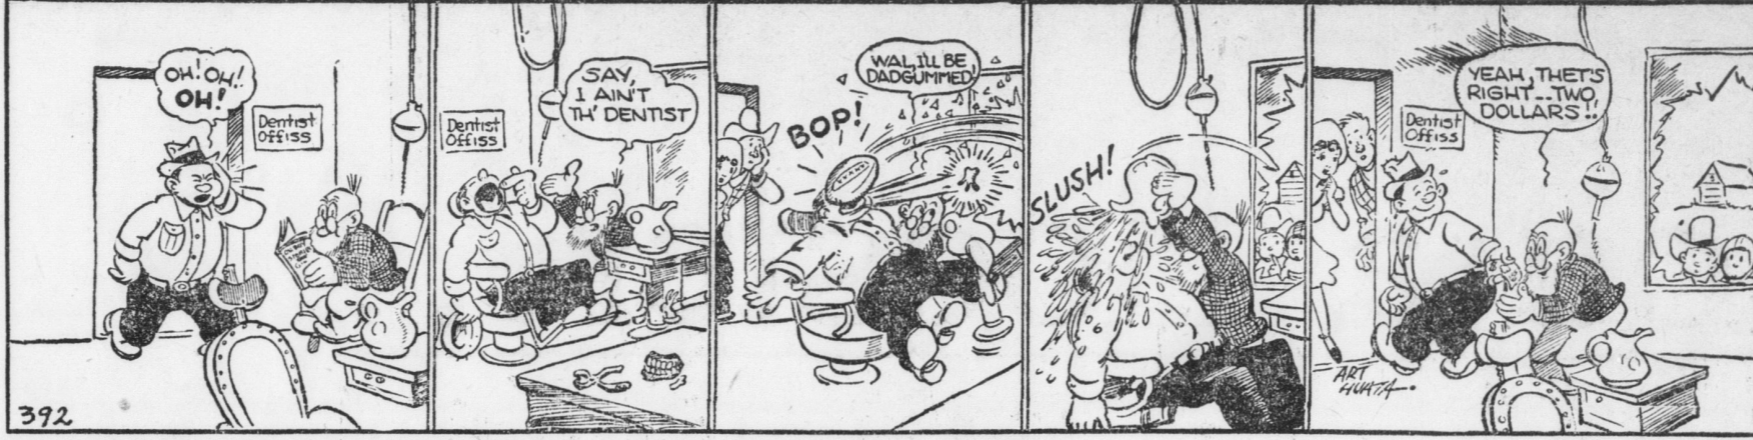

Up at March Run at the army post, during leisure hour, one of the fellows looked up from the book he was reading and asked: "Hey, what's a metaphor?" The guy next to him answered: "Dogsgone if I know." And a very quiet fellow sitting way back in the corner said: "I know what it is. I lived on a farm and my Pop always has a metaphor his cows."

Here's the pay-off. It might be lengthy but you couldn't appreciate it without knowing the details. ... Last Tuesday, Jim Eshbach, Florin postmaster, told his missus he was going out and put the new license plates on his car. And she said: "Before you go you sign your new card right away and then you won't forget it."

So Jim obediently got his pen and with her looking on he signed the new cards and placed them in his wallet. Then he went out, got the car and drove to Mount Joy on business and then went up to see A. D. Garber at his home. Since the latter was under the weather he was sitting at the window and Jim sat there with him.

Suddenly Jim looked out the window and exclaimed: "Look, A. D., you're right." "I'll have license plates on that fellow better watch out or he'll be caught." A. D. said: "you're right." "I'll have to sit here and see who it is." ... After a while Jim took his leave and went out to get in his car. Then he came back to A. D.'s all

AUNT MIN SEZ:

Sum'a these here old sayin's sure are truthful... never seen anything like it! Take for instance that there old sayin' "A hawlin' cow soon forgets 'N stuff..."

Well, last year cousin Lem just couldn't talk for cryin' about the loss'a his mate, Tessie... poor Tessie she wuz ailin', fer a long time'n at last the end come'n poor Lem he jest couldn't be consoled nohow... it wuz a piteful sight to see, deed it wuz...

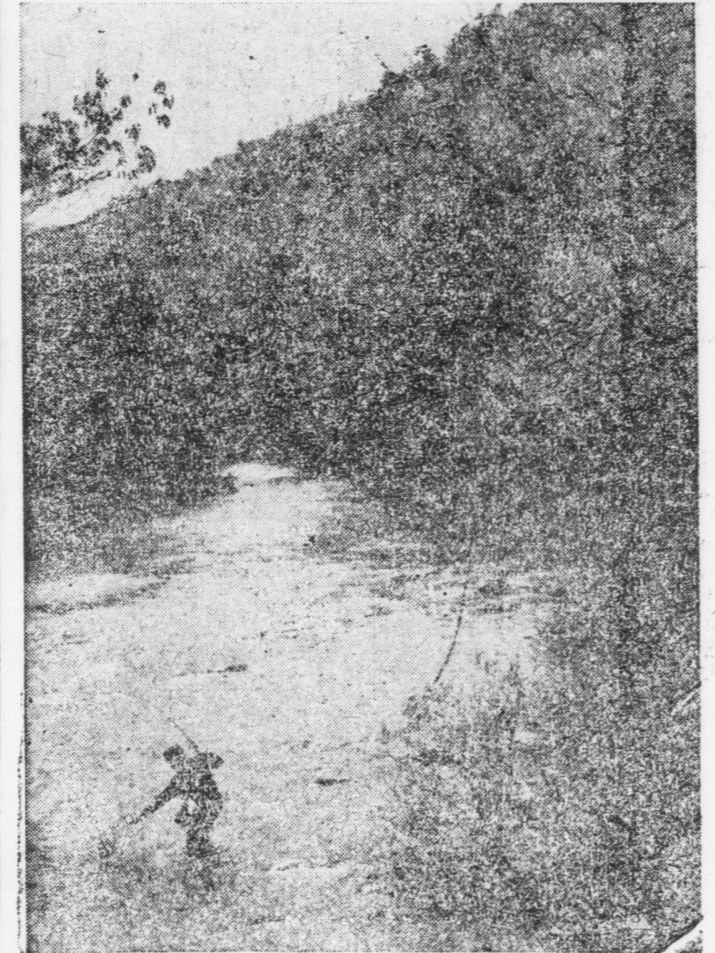

"Min," sez Lem to me one day... "Min, I'm gettin' a stone fer to place on dear Tessie's grave... what could a body put on that would be right touchin'-like... 'N after givin' the matter a awful lot'a consideration, the beautiful thought come to my brain..." So I told Lem about it'n he thought it wuz wonderful touchin' so he had in pretty big letters put on the stone... "The Light'a My Life Has Went Out"...

That stone wuz looked at by pretty near everybody, speakin' on 'ow nice it sounded'n then about six months afterwards in comes Lem with smiles streamin' all over his face, with a right pretty woman besides him'n he sed to me... "Min this here's my new wife, Sadie..." "N wbe I sed 'pleased to meet you'... the thought come to me about 'hat touchin' writin' on Tessie's stone... this here thing started in worryin' me what folks'd think'n then it wuzn't long till I wuz takin' sum flowers up'n when I stopped to look at the sayin' on the stone... 'ere wuz sumpin' else added underneath in littler writin'... It wuz just... "The Light'a my life has went out..." "But I struck another match!" "N I walked home in humiliation'n wonderment, vov'n' never again to write poetry on a tombstone for nobody!! Jest don't make sc'n.e sumtimes."

 excited and stammered: "My gosh A. D., that's my Car!" ... It was a good April Fool's joke anyway.
 Well, I guess that's all.

HERE IS ONE FISHERMAN IN A MILLION
 Kinston, N. C. — Rodney A. Kew was wading in a Dauphin county creek when a one-pound perch leaped into one of his hip boots. He threw the prize back, however, because, he said, "one is forbidden to take fresh water fish during spawning season. Besides, I had no fishing license."
