The Oyster Drinks and Works 24 Hours a Day

The oyster drinks all day, swallowing up to 4 1/2 gallons of water an hour through a slight gap between the two valves of its shell. From this liquid diet it strains the nourishing minerals washed away from the soil into the sea. Calcium is spread in a pearly layer over the inside of the shell, enlarging its diameter about an inch a year.

Foreseeing that nature's bounty would end, the founding fathers of Connecticut began protecting their oyster fisheries in 1784. Despite protective measures, the oyster has become scarcer. At the beginning of this century the annual yield of oysters from the continent's coastal waters was half again as large as the present "take."

The gradual depletion of the nation's "wild" oyster beds is typified by the Chesapeake fisheries, which 60 years ago yielded from 25 to 30 million bushels annually. Now the yearly crop may be less than one-seventh of the old totals. Efforts about the 1880s to protect the natural oyster beds in Chesapeake waters started "oyster wars" between government boats and an oyster-pirate fleet armed with cannon.

Now the seafood patrol enforces conservation laws protecting oysters under a prescribed size. Since the wild oyster has become scarce, the bivalve now served on the half-shell in most parts of the country is as domesticated as the strawberry or the tomato, a product of planting, transplanting, cultivating, and harvesting.

U. S. Is Attacking From Center of Aleutian Isles

Occupation of the Andreanof islands by navy-supported U. S. army troops puts the Americans "in the middle" of the Aleutian water. The central island of the Andreanofs is just about halfway between the Alaska mainland and, until recently, Japanese-held Attu, westernmost of the Aleutians. Tanaga, nearest of the main Andreanof islands to Kiska, is only about 175 air miles (little over half an hour's average bombing time) from that much-attacked Japanese base.

The Andreanof group offers a possible selection of half a dozen sites for Uncle Sam's reportedly large occupational forces. Atka is the largest. Situated near the eastern end of the chain, it is, however, more than 300 air miles from Kiska. Atka has an area of roughly 600 square miles. It is curiously shaped, with a headlike formation in the northeast tapering to a slim tail's point in the southwest. Like the rest of the Aleutians, Atka is generally mountainous, with rocky, precipitous shores, although there are a number of harbors, beaches and inland open spaces suitable for air fields. Its active volcano, Korovin, in the northeast, is nearly 5,000 feet high.

Oil on Bahrain Island - Bahrain island, in the Persian gulf, greatly overflows the other islets of the small archipelago, runs 26 miles north to south and is 10 miles wide. The petroleum wells and refinery are near the center, where there are hills up to 400 feet. Along the north coast is a small fertile area where herds graze and figs, dates, wheat and barley are grown. On the northeast coast the Sheikh's palace overlooks Manama, the island's port town of 35,000 people. Northward is the harbor, lying between protecting reefs.

In recent years a causeway has been built from Manama to Muharrag town on Muharrag island, because the latter was chosen as the site for a commercial airline port. In the protected water east of Manama and south of Muharrag is a British naval anchorage.

Army's New Plastic - If it is any solace to the soldier, the notes of reveille which awaken him in the morning now will have a better tone, the war department announced today. Designed primarily to save brass, an essential metal, a new plastic trumpet has been adopted and will be issued. Not only will the new instrument save approximately 20 ounces of brass for each trumpet, but the tone is better, it is reported. Made of cellulose acetate, the trumpet is olive drab, blending well with uniforms and other army equipment without benefit of paint or polish.

Penalties for Careless Hunters - The Michigan law providing for denial of hunting licenses to big game hunters accidentally shooting humans, has been extended to apply also to small game hunters, the Michigan department of conservation announced. However, while the court may order revocation of a deer hunting license for the current year and the three years following, small game licenses may be revoked only for the current and first ensuing year.

The small game provision has been on the books since January 10, but last season's hunting was nearly over at that time, so few small game hunters are now barred. Two hundred and ten names appear on the 1943 deer license blacklist.

Natives of South Africa Join Allies

Hereros of Former German Colony Seek Revenge. LONDON.—Deep hatred of their former German masters has never ceased to rankle in the hearts of some native tribes of Southwest Africa since the German-Herero war there in the 1880s when the commander of the colony, General von Trotha, furious at the tribe's fierce resistance, ordered his soldiers to exterminate every Herero — man, woman and child.

A call by the government of the Union of South Africa for recruits for the Native Military Corps has caused them to flock eagerly to the colors.

The Hereros, descendants of the remnants of that tribe who escaped extermination, are training with grim determination, according to the Johannesburg Sunday Times. Ovambos, whose contact with the Germans was less, but who nevertheless know by repute the character of the previous rulers of Southwest Africa, are coming forward in large numbers to help in the struggle. Damaras, too, Hottentots and even a few Bushmen are joining up.

From the mountains of Basutoland, the sandy wastes of Bechuanaland and the wild mountains of Swaziland, which compose the British High Commission territories, natives in large numbers have joined the Armed Auxiliary Pioneer corps set up in these British High Commission territories a year ago. The population of these territories numbers 1,000,000, in round figures. Between 7,000 and 100,000 natives are regularly employed in Union of South Africa industries, mainly in the gold mines. Yet 20,000 of them have been doing fine service in the Middle East and 15,000 more will soon follow them.

Rubber-Like Material in Golf Balls Is Not Rubber

Maybe it was just so much hard rubber to you. The tough golf ball cover that took the full force of your hook or slice before you gave your clubs to the salvage drive was not rubber, however. In most cases it was balata; in some, it was balata.

Dimple or mesh, there will be no more of these useful gums for golf balls for the duration. Gutta percha came largely from Borneo, Sumatra and Java. Balata, its first cousin, from South America, now must do double duty. The War Production board recently issued strict regulations governing uses of the limited balata supply.

Balata, like gutta percha, is flexible but hardly elastic, says a National Geographic society bulletin. Neither can qualify as a versatile rubber substitute, but both have well-established uses that ease the critical demands for rubber. Strong, tough, water-resistant, nonconductive, they are invaluable as ocean cable coverings. Also, they are used to make industrial belting, boot and shoe soles, dental packing and plates. One of balata's military assignments is in the manufacture of self-sealing fuel tanks for airplanes and other modern war vehicles.

Rights of French Women Increased by Government

VICHY.—The detention of many French families as war prisoners in Germany is having the effect of increasing the legal rights and responsibilities of women. A law being drafted by the Petain government will give women the status of heads of households if their husbands are absent. Within certain limitations, they will be able to administer and dispose of their own property, and that of their households, without the approval of husbands.

Only men vote, but with so many men absent, the practical effect is that very few have the right of suffrage. Under existing statutes, women may not be elected to office, but the Petain government has been appointing women to municipal councils. In the absence of mayors, women may perform civil marriage ceremonies.

Navy Discloses Bases in Fiji and Hebrides

WASHINGTON.—The existence of American bases in the New Hebrides and the Fiji Islands became officially known tonight with mention of these island groups in a navy communique on the sinking of the cruisers Guadalupe, Vincennes and Astoria near Guadalcanal island on August 9.

No information about the size or type of these bases was vouchsafed, but the communique named them as among the points threatened by the enemy if development of Japanese bases in the Solomons was not checked.

Qattara Depression - The Qattara depression is situated between Libya and the Nile delta, its northern rim lying about 40 miles south of the Mediterranean sea and its extreme eastern tip extending to within 130 miles of Cairo. About one-half of its total area of 6,500 square miles is over 100 feet below the level of the Mediterranean and at one point in the south is 440 feet below sea level. This region of sand dunes, alkali flats and salt plains and marshes, narrows from a broad base in the southwest to a tip in the northeast, with concave edges on the east and south. Caravan tracks cross it from south to northeast and from east to west but no good roads reach the depression. There are small settlements around the few springs and oases along the northern and western fringes.

Great Lakes Ships Being Moved Down Inland Rivers

Ships formerly operated on the Great Lakes are now being converted for wartime use as ocean shipping for yards in New Orleans, Mobile, Ala., and Galveston, Texas, the war shipping administration disclosed.

The vessels, all built in the early 1900s, averaged about 4,000 gross tons and are between 350 and 400 feet long. They were moved down the Illinois waterway and the Mississippi river after their superstructures had been stripped down to permit passage under numerous bridges.

The boats are among dozens which have been moved from Great Lakes routes for wartime ocean transport duty. Government authorities declined to reveal the number. In addition to the inland route to the Gulf, a number of ships have been taken down the St. Lawrence waterway and the New York State Barge canal.

Practically any boat now operating on the lakes, one government official said, could be moved over the inland route to the Gulf, provided there is proper ballasting and, in some cases, removal of superstructure and machinery. By such procedure the boats may be held within the maximum draft of eight feet.

A $2,000,000 navy project, in which machinery for moving or lifting 17 bridges on the Chicago sanitary and ship canal is being provided, will reduce difficulties with moving the larger boats.
