Residents Now Charge That Rendering Plant Is A Public Nuisance

Residents of the Newville area of West Donegal Township instituted contempt proceedings against the Harrisburg Hide and Rendering Co., charging that the plant is a nuisance.

The matter, presented through Alfred C. Alspach for certain residents of that community, is being held under advisement by the court pending a possible agreement.

It is contended that the plant emits offending odors, contrary to a former court order of two years ago when an injunction was entered against Meyer and Abe Gross, the owners.

It is further contended that the plant has been overloaded that untidy practices exist, that dead animals are kept around the place too long and that the equipment was run down.

Farmers Get More Machines During 1944

A sharp reduction in rationing of farm machinery in Pennsylvania next year was announced by chairman James E. Walker of the State War Board, U. S. Department of Agriculture agency.

Walker said only 19 of the 91 items on the present rationed list will be parcelled out to farmers on the same basis in 1944. Regulations for the purchase of all others will be relaxed, he added, and in many cases restrictions will be lifted entirely. No reason was given for easing the rationing regulations.

The chairman also said the State Board will know by November what percentage of the 1944 national production (Turn to page four)
