LARGE TRUCK DAMAGED WHEN COUPLING FALLS

A tank truck with a cargo of 4,000 gallons of gasoline lost a coupling while ascending a hill on Route 230 at Landisville at 2 a. m. Wed. The tank sprang a leak and the Landisville Fire Company was called to stand by because of the fire hazard.

Another truck was brought and the remainder of the gasoline transferred to it. State Policeman F. A. Minchoc and Rufus Williams were also called and rerouted traffic until the truck was removed and sand sprinkled over the gasoline, Lester Mumma, 12 W. Donegal St., this boro, driver of the truck was uninjured.

Miniature Greenhouses Many vegetables, particularly vine crops, tomatoes and peppers, thrive only in warm weather. Good growth is usually not made by these vegetables until the last week in May or early in June. Use of hot-caps on warm-season crops may bring harvest of the crops a week or two earlier.

Hot-caps are miniature greenhouses placed over separate plants or hills of vegetables. Plant protectors of this sort cost two cents or more, depending on size, and are made of translucent, water-resistant paper that lets the sunlight through to warm the plants. On sunny days the temperature inside a hot-cap may be 10 degrees or 20 degrees above the temperature outside.

Fabric Storage Textile specialists from the U. S. department of agriculture recently finished a four-year study of the effects of different kinds of storage on different fabrics. Cotton and wool kept at an attic temperature of about 102 degrees were weaker at the end of the test and both white cotton and white linen had turned yellow, indicating a chemical change. Linen did not suffer as much damage from attic heat as cotton and wool did, but it was slightly weaker. Fabrics stored in the dark suffered less than those stored in the light, which makes fabrics break down chemically and become weaker.
