USE MORE POTATOES SAYS PENNSYLVANIA QUEEN

PENNSYLVANIA STATE PMA COMMITTEE

Alarmed because farmers in the Red River Valley of North Dakota and in Maine dumped potatoes in the field due to inadequate winter storage facilities for a bumper crop, Pennsylvania farmers initiated the most aggressive sales and use campaign in the state's history in February.

In response to a promotion campaign inaugurated by the Production and Marketing Committee of the United States Department of Agriculture, Pennsylvania farmers and merchants spearheaded a strong "use more potatoes campaign." At the forefront of this campaign was Nina Hershner, pretty blonde "Potato Blossom Queen" of the Pennsylvania Co-operative Potato Growers who left her farm home and college classes to make a tour of cities in the Keystone state.

In Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Scranton, Wilkes-Barre and York she glamorized the lowly spud and demonstrated that potatoes are not fattening by her own trim figure.

three days away. From Casado, the settlers will move by rail, wagons and afoot to the three Mennonite colonies previously established.

Two of those colonies are in the vast Gran Chaco flatlands. One colony, called Colonia Fernheim — meaning a colony far away from home — will take the majority of the new settlers and give them landstakes and a financial start toward a new life.

Paraguay, which guarantees religious freedom, always has been eager to receive the Mennonite farmers to work the country's rich, red soil. On their own initiative, the Mennonites soon will open a leper colony near Concepcion.

Settlers Welcomed Since 1890
Paraguay, with the smallest population in South America, first began seeking settlers about 1890. In 1893 a group of Australians tried to establish a socialist colony called New Australia, but the venture collapsed.

The Mennonites, who started coming here in 1926, have been more successful, although occasionally someone — as for instance the well-publicized Penna. farmer of a few years back — becomes disgruntled with the heat, malaria and sometimes unfriendly Indians, and departs.

Several Jewish colonization organizations have applied for permission to migrate to Paraguay, but the country's dictator, President Higinio Morinigo, has anti-Semitic tendencies.

HERE'S A RECORD, FELLOWS

Governor Duff, Friday, presented a scroll for safe driving to Walter M. Hugar, Altoona, who drove a truck 1,160,000 miles in 14 years without an accident. He certainly deserved it.
