Soil Replacement Is Now Essential

Soil Food Drainage Must Be Replaced

No enemy bombs hit American soil during World War II, but the nation's farm land nevertheless was "mined" in order to produce the gigantic crop yield which helped make victory possible, according to a statement made public by the Middle West Soil Improvement committee.

"Wartime crop goals which were necessary to produce foodstuffs, meat, dairy products, oil and fiber crops at a rate never before attained in history," says the statement, "drained the soil's resources of nitrogen, phosphorus and potash faster than they could be replaced. "As a result the need for carrying out soil-rebuilding and erosion-control practices will be great for many years to come.

"American farmers increased their production at least one-third above prewar records. In order to meet world food demands and prevent famine overseas, they are being asked to continue their crop output at high levels.

"Steps to repair the damage done to the soil's fertility level during the war and to make the land content to yield crops enough to solve the world food crisis, are therefore imperatively necessary.

"The means for accomplishing this lie in providing the soil with all available plant food containing nitrogen, phosphorus and potash and in following intelligent farm management practices such as the raising of nitrogen-fixing legumes, regular crop rotation, pasture improvement and where necessary, contour plowing."

Milk Can Range Waterer Ten gallon milk can makes an excellent water container for range and other uses. Rusted cans no longer suitable for milk are satisfactory. Fill the cans with water and invert them into pans large enough to permit plenty of drinking space. This North Dakota station idea will prove a labor saver.

Two-Row Fertilizer This two-row, horse drawn fertilizer distributor has been converted from a one-row planter by the Texas Agricultural Experimental station. The machine may be used for putting down commercial fertilizer in listed furrows in advance of rebedding land or for side dressing row crops.

2-4-D Use on Irish Potatoes Discouraged The use of 2-4-D as a weed killer in potato patches has not always proved satisfactory. Herbicidal agents selected in character might find widespread use if they removed undesirable weeds without causing concurrent injury to a growing crop, according to studies conducted at Camp Detrick, Md.

It was found that the use of substituted phenoxyacetic acids, such as 2-methyl-4-chlorophenoxyacetic acid and 2,4-dichlorophenoxyacetic acid, may be of value for the selective control of weeds in potato fields.

Dairy Cows Need More Room in Their Mangers One of the greatest needs in barns on the average farm is larger mangers, according to Carl Huffman of Michigan State college. He states that some mangers just aren't big enough to hold all the roughage that a cow should eat, while others which are large enough do not get enough hay put into them to produce milk cheaply. Good roughage will cut down the amount of grain the cows need.
