EDITORIAL

Two Chicago chemists claim that powdered eggs are just about as good as fresh eggs. We know a number of soldiers and sailors of World War II who disagree.

New we leave the season of basketball's seven footers for baseball's miners.

Appears as though the mint should begin making six or seven cent pieces. There really isn't much that a nickel will buy today.

NO RELIEF AS YET

The oleomargarine tax bill has been sidetracked. It would appear that the dairymen have a more forceful lobby on Capitol Hill, than the housewives. Evidently, the folks who shelved the margarine levy, figure the women will have so many other things to take into consideration when balloting rolls around, that the subject of margarine won't enter the booth. There are a number of housewives, trying to keep food costs down, who are sorry to learn the Federal tax will continue to be imposed upon the butter substitute.

HEADACHES AT HOME

The national emergency provision contained in the Taft-Hartley labor law, has been used by a federal court to keep workers, in an atomic bomb laboratory, from going out on strike. Not allowed to quit their jobs for 90 days, there is hope to reach an agreement between officials and labor within this time. Lewis' mine workers, on strike over pension demands, cut into production of steel and cause a growing crisis in rail transportation. Meat handlers on strike have caused meat prices to soar. There is a familiar sound about these differences at home, as well as the news that we hear of conditions abroad. An aggressive nation gobbling up countries abroad, a series of strikes in the U. S. accusations of isolationists about war mongers . . . reminds us of recent past history.

BEAR IN MIND

Divorce is a major illness in America and the reasons given for it are many. A suggestion comes from a husband, who believes the man with a good memory for small things, will find home a happier place and his wife a more congenial little woman. Remembering all birthdays and wedding anniversaries, for a starter, holiday greetings and flowers occasionally are nice gestures. The list includes: shaving regularly, wearing a tie when company comes, not dropping ashes on the floor, not using a face towel to wipe the car or shine the shoes, refraining from criticizing the wife's driving and her bridge game. Probably every local husband could add more items to this list. The individual things we overlook doing aren't bad in themselves, but doing them over a period of time, "forgetfulness" can spell trouble.

GET GOING

When the President's Conference on Fire Prevention was held in Washington last May, one of the important recommendations was that each state call a conference of its own in order to deal most effectively with regional problems and hazards.

Up to March 15, twenty states have held or have definitely scheduled conferences of that type, and some more have started preliminary work. And a number, according to the available information, have done little or nothing.

The states which are really attacking the fire problem are to be congratulated for recognizing one of the worst threats to the life and property of the people. The states which have not acted cannot offer any excuse—they are inviting disaster. Fire prevention is essentially a local job, and nothing can be done at the national level except to offer recommendations. The state, the city, the town, the village—these are the levels at which fire can be effectively fought. For, if the job is to be successfully accomplished, the danger of fire, and the simple, basic means of preventing fire, must be bought straight home to every citizen. No outside agency can make a man's home or place of business safe. He must do it for himself, using as an aid the exhaustive knowledge that has been gained of the main causes of fire and how they may be eliminated.

State fire prevention conferences are the necessary starting points for campaign that will do something besides talk. It's time to get going.

OIL IS NEEDED

When there is talk of war there arises the vital point of the U. S. oil supply and its future. Today we have an acute shortage and, according to the petroleum industry, this might be solved for a NORMAL demand, if they could get the steel products to expand activities in oil fields, refineries and distribution lines. What is of principal concern, is what would happen if we needed more than a normal supply of oil. The prospect is not cheery.

At the present rate of consumption, by 1954 we will daily be using 7 million barrels and it is estimated that the domestic output then would be but 5 million barrels daily. This nation needs a reserve supply, for emergencies. The only hope is to discover new fields and for the old ones to yield more than the estimated flow. It costs more now to explore for new fields and they are generally smaller than the old wells. There lies the hope of drilling oceanic land of the Pacific and the Gulf. No other country has been scouting for oil as completely as ours and, though we have 31 percent of the world's acknowledged oil reserve, yet we supply 63 percent of the world production and use nearly all of it right here at home.

WHAT PRICE ILLNESS

Illness harrasses every family that counts the high cost of living. Doctors, hospital treatment, medication, chews into the budget. The subject of socialized medicine is discussed in some quarters, as a means to an end. Most of us would prefer a solution rather than socialized medicine but, it is true that most of us, feel that something must be done about the high price of illness. With increased costs all along the line, when sickness comes, because of prohibitive fees, folks will go without treatment, perhaps become invalids, shorten their lives. The medical profession says bureaucratic control of medicine will hinder the advance of medicine. As much as man wants science to stride forward, that man wants his loved ones to be cared for when they are ill. He thinks of drugs, x-rays, therapy, dental care, glasses, special treatment, and diagnosis, and counts the cost as beyond his means. Needy cases in thousands of communities are neglected because people sacrifice health due to the cost of maintaining it.

Doctors work hard, have long hours, attained medical degrees through years of study at great expense. They deserve a goodly income for their services and knowledge. For their sake, we won't socialize medicine, if they think it detrimental to the nation's good, but we do feel, if something isn't worked out to improve the health of the general public, that drugs, doctors, clinics, hospitals, will eventually come under some method of control.

uel Harnish of the East Hempfield Schools. Approximately seventy pupils of these four schools will take part in the concert programs. These students will wear the uniforms of their respective schools which will add color to the appearance of the Band.

Those who had the privilege of hearing these people in their first concert at East Donegal School can assure you it will be well-worth your efforts to come out on Tuesday evening. It will be a time of real enjoyment for all music lovers. There is no admission charge but a silver offering will be taken.

JUST AS GOOD—CHEAPER
Whiskey "made from wood, aged in wood" was urged by a chemistry professor. The stuff would be just as good as whiskey from grain, and cheaper.
