SHORT STORY

The Rainbow Special

By T. M. RIDER
 WHEN the woman who had been gazing wistfully at Madame Bluce's window display finally entered and asked—of all things—to try on the Rainbow Special, Mady Clark's pleasant smile wavered. That gaudy, multi-colored dress with its golden sash had been displayed because party time was near and Madame Bluce felt some girl might like it for a gay affair. Of course, the woman was small and thin enough to slip into it. But she had a sweet face, the kind that made you think of a mother in lavender and lace.
 Mady showed her to the dressing room, then walked over to the sweater counter.
 A minute later the customer shyly opened the dressing room door.
 "It's beautiful," she cried. "I know Tom will remember me as I used to look. You know how husbands are. They just don't realize a woman doesn't grow any younger with time."
 So that was the wrinkle. She was trying to become a spring chicken for her husband's sake. Somehow it didn't seem right for a nice old lady. Mady couldn't help thinking that some day she might get married and she'd grow old, too. Then, would she have to suffer the experience this woman was suffering?
 Mady walked over to the woman and said, "I've just thought of a special dress for madam. A pale blue creation that would be chic with costume pearls and matching earrings."
 "Pale blue? Oh, no! My husband loves colors that are bright and alive. You see, he's an artist, and a brilliant one, too."
 SHE spoke in a proud voice and smoothed the Rainbow Special with work-worn hands. Mady asked hesitantly, "I don't mean to pry, but is your husband ill? Perhaps a floral dress—"
 "Tom ill? You wouldn't ask that if you saw him. He's big and husky, and he always says my cooking's making him fat." She beamed until she noticed Mady staring wonderingly at her hands. Then she said quietly, "I've worked at washing dishes in a restaurant for the past 10 years and I'm proud of it because—well, because I'm doing it for my husband. But I guess you're too young to understand that love means more than roses and kisses.
 "My Tom's worth anything, any sacrifice," the lady continued, and brushed at her cheeks with sudden remembrance. "And I must hurry. He's waiting outside in the car and I know he's growing impatient."
 That was the last straw! Mady shook her head despairingly.
 "Erma, is that you?" a deep voice suddenly boomed from the doorway. "I got tired of waiting and crossed the street."
 The woman gasped and hurried over to a tall dark-haired man. "Oh, you shouldn't have, Tom. I was coming right out."
 WHY, the lady was actually quivering as though she had committed some heinous crime by making him wait a few minutes! Mady glared at him. So this was the brilliant artist! He was husky enough to swing a pick and shovel. Well, why didn't he, instead of making his pitifully small wife slave for him? If this was love she'd steer clear of it!
 "That new dress does things to you, Erma!" He placed his huge hands on her shoulders and held her off at arm's length. "Ah, those colors, my dear! They're soft, yet warm and alive. I can't wait to get hold of some paints and brushes."
 "Now, Tom, you shouldn't work so soon after the operation. You know what the doctor said."
 He nodded thoughtfully and sighed. "Guess I can wait a little longer at that. But say, my vision's improving every minute. I just crossed the street myself. And only this morning you looked so—so colorless. But now, I swear you look just—just like you did before I went blind ten years ago, Erma."
 Erma's answering smile was as bright as the sun. Mady felt her heart begin to pound furiously. The artist was recovering from an eye operation and probably would never see colors normally again!
