Turnpike Core
 bridge footings must be sunk. And since a number of these bridges will be necessary to drill cores in county soil to test the structure of the land and rock, officials say.
 Turnpike engineers state that where the rock is too deep, bridge footings must be spread over a large area or piles sunk to carry the tremendous weight of the highway, bridge and traffic.
 Sprague and Henwood, of Scranton, have been given the contract for all diamond core drilling on the extension except that in Cumberland and York Counties, where Pennsylvania Drilling Company will do the work.
