SHORT STORY

Fresh Air
 By
 MICHAEL TIFF

"IF THERE'S anything I hate," muttered Bud McDaniels, "it's swinging this pick."
 "It's the smart guys that get real joy out o' life, said Tim Lafferty.
 "Dumb galoots like us sweat our heads off for pennies and what we call three squares." Bud threw down his pick. "We're thinking the same. Let's eat." Climbing out of the ditch, they opened their baskets and began to wolf their sandwiches. As Bud relaxed on an apple, a torn portion of a newspaper was blown against him.
 "What you reading?" asked his friend, picking his teeth and lying on his back in the sun.
 "Listen to this,"
 said Bud. "Says
 here, 'Not satisfac-
 ed with a new plane, Clarence Dunne bought a motorboat and took long rides up the Hudson.' That guy sure is one o' those smart ones we were talking about."
 "What's the headline?" asked Tim.
 "That part's torn away. But here's some more. 'Clarence became known as Playboy Number One along the Big Stem. There wasn't a night club he didn't visit.
 When he stepped out with the chorines, he left a trail of dollars behind him.' Can you imagine a guy like that?" Bud looked up from the paper. "He knew how to enjoy life. Catch him going miles near a pick."
 "Wish I was in his boots. Any more?"
 "Yep. It says here, 'Clarence stopped only at the classiest hotels and gave the bell-boys fifty dollars apiece. He invited the prettiest girls to his parties and the champagne ran free as a waterfall. With Clarence there wasn't any limit. His philosophy was to have a rip-roaring time while he could. He bought diamonds and rubies for his favorites. And he liked his food.' Bud looked up. "Get that, Tim? this guy liked his eats."
 Tim sat up. "Go on, read more.
 I bet he ate like a king, eh?"
 "Bet he did. Well, it says here,
 'Clarence was a modern Jim Brady.
 If there ever was one. He had the best meals, salads and sauces in the hotels. He ate three times as much as the average man."
 "Boy, he sure did have the right slant," said Tim. "Why, I'd call him the smartest man that ever breathed."
 "Only fools like us work like slaves and for what? Some beef sandwiches and a hard bed to sleep in. And my wife, Ann. What does she get out of it? Why, Clarence Dunne had something to offer a girl." Bud turned the paper around.
 "Look, there's more on this side.
 Says, 'Clarence Dunne laughed when reporters asked him whether he liked to work. "Work," said Clarence with a knowing wink. "What do you take me for? I tried work once.

 I didn't take to it or maybe it didn't take to me!"
 "Bud, after hearing about Clarence I'll be hanged if I care to go back to that ditch with the others."
 The other men were rubbing their sleepy eyes and putting their lunch kits in order. Soon the afternoon shift would begin, four hours of sweating and straining.
 "Anything more about this Clarence guy?" inquired Tim hopefully.
 "Just a few more words down here at the bottom." Bud concentrated upon the bit of paper before the signal from the foreman would end their rest. "It says, 'Clarence remained quite calm and at ease as he was led away by the police'— hey, what's this about the police?" Bud leaned closer to the ground and Tim stooped forward, his ears cocked.
 "Go on, read, Bud."
 "To the cell which will be Clarence Dunne's home for the next twenty years—the total sentence for the series of bank robberies." Bud and Tim exchanged silent glances. Then they picked up their tools and went back to the ditch.
