SHORT STORY

That Old Mr. Crane
By ANNA E. WILSON

OLD MR. CRANE sat in a padded armchair before the fire in his room. The pipe and tobacco on the table beside him went untouched. Old Mrs. Cranston had given him the pipe and tobacco, the armchair and the basement room. In return he tended the furnace and sometimes swept the floor.

Old Mr. Crane began to think about himself as he'd have liked to have been. He might dream that he'd had a fine father and mother, or maybe a doctor and a teacher. Someone whose money came in regular and who'd have seen that he got educated; who could have found what he was suited to and maybe given him a start. He'd have married, well, someone like Alda Rich, who used to ride her bicycle past his father's house and who sometimes stopped to speak to him. Alda was Dr. Rich's daughter and spoke to everybody. A nice girl, not stuck-up or proud.

The children would have been like Alda, too. Two boys and two girls. He'd have called the elder girl Alda and one of the boys for himself, Milton Crane, Jr. People would have written it that way on letters. He'd seen it that way when he'd carried in the mail for old Dr. Rich that summer when he mowed lawns for his keep. Dr. Rich had given him many a stray quarter on the side.

After Algy, the smallest, got pneumonia and died, their father had failed. He and Sam had quit school and gone to work, he himself into the grocery business. But he drifted from job to job. Sam put it in words, "It's not that you don't mean right or that you're lazy, but it seems like you have got to be moving." Sam had always been good to him just the same as he had been good to Dad. Sam was dead now. He'd felt bad when Sam died.

He'd moved around just as Sam said, and when he was young and strong, he'd managed pretty well—harvesting, lumbering, sailing once on a boat. It's a life that's hard on a man, having no proper comforts. Once Sam had come out to visit

3-Minute Fiction

Search for Mahogany

There are no mahogany forests. Typically, the trees are scattered through the jungle here and there. An average of two trees to the acre is considered a very good stand. At first only the trees on the river banks were cut, and transportation was not a serious problem. These trees have long since gone so the hunt for mahogany and its logging have been one long battle with the trackless tropical jungle.

Deer's Point System

Usual method of gauging a deer's point system is this: A buck's tines or point grow larger and more numerous each successive year until they are twelve. At this time the buck is usually about five years of age. There are abnormal situations where the number of points vary, but usually in an average healthy buck the above is true.

Hungarian Partridge

This European game bird was brought to this country in the early 1900's in large numbers for stocking purposes. Between 1900 and 1909 nearly 50,000 birds were imported, principally in the northeastern states. The "hunkie," as he is commonly called, is slightly larger than our "bob-white" quail.

Handy Bottle of Vinegar

Many homemakers like the idea of keeping a bottle of vinegar on hand with several cloves of garlic and a few pods of red peppers in it. Such vinegar is particularly pleasing in flavor when used in making mayonnaise or french dressing for vegetable salads, and is delicious too when poured over a roast of lamb or beef.

Washington Monument

Cornerstone of the Washington monument was laid on July 4, 1848. The famous obelisk rests on a stone 20 feet or more underground at the base of the monument's original foundations. The stone was taken from a Baltimore quarry. The shaft is 555 feet high.

Shade for Birds

Framework made of poles and covered with palmetto leaves will provide good shade for birds on farms where natural shade of trees and other growth is not available. Shade and plenty of clean fresh water are essential for flocks in hot weather.

Seemed the girls got tired of him and looked to steadier men.

him. "You're getting no younger. Maybe you should think of marrying and settling down."

IN THE end, he'd had to help out Sam. It hadn't been much he'd had to give Sally when Sam died, but until Sam's boy grew up, he'd stayed at that elevator and worked hard. Sally'd asked him to come and live with them, but Sally had a nice house and, after knocking around all over, a man gets kind of rough. It wouldn't have been fitting, and he'd always tried to do what was fitting.

It was in the hospital that Mrs. Cranston found him. She'd given him the room and the chair and yesterday she'd given him the tobacco and the pipe, although the furnace was black out.

"Never mind the furnace," she'd said, "We'll get someone to look after that—just rest."

She knew. She was his kind. They must have told her that he hadn't long to go. It was nice here, dreaming of Alda by the fire, and, maybe, a kid or two, though he'd known well, it wasn't fitting for him to be looking at Alda Rich after her father died.

He must have fallen asleep and been talking again for old Mrs. Cranston, who had been Alda Rich, came in. She was holding a glass and there were tears in her voice when she spoke.

"Drink this, Mill, you've just been having a bad dream." Released by WNU Features.
