EDITORIAL

Some people have tact while the others tell the truth.

It used to be a girl was serenaded with a guitar. Today its the automobile horn.

There is a whale of a difference between the man who fishes for port and the man who catches something.

In our estimation, when folks speak of the head of the family, they refer to the one who carries the head aches.

AIR MAIL SERVICE

As far back as 1910, a Texas senator asked for consideration of a bill calling for an investigation to determine the feasibility of air mail service. It was not until May 15, 1918, that the first experimental air mail route was established. It ran from New York to Washington, a distance of 218 miles. Today air mail service is no longer in experimental stage but a highly developed system that has expanded to reach every continent with speed and precision. It took skill and courage to pilot those planes when there were no modern instruments of radio and navigation. Our tribute is to all those pioneers in the air mail service and to those in government circles who fought for the establishment and development of the air mail.

USING MORE WATER

Spring rains bring life-giving qualities to growing things. Hot dry days that follow will find the millions of us taking water into our own hands to keep lawns and gardens refreshed. When water is to be had just by turning of tap or manipulating of pump, we think little of its essential value as it now comes so easily. Its importance can be best appreciated by that man who has been without it, that farmer who depends upon it for his crops. Again we need to be warned that undue waste and excessive draining can lower the water levels to an alarming degree. With industry, agrig culture, air conditioning, tapping the underground water reserves so mightily, conservation on the part of many would be wise, though perhaps not absolutely necessary. It will at least contribute to conservation so that nature can be helped to replenish faster than the reserve is used.

SCHOOL'S END

In many localities the key clicks the lock on school house doors in May, in others it comes in June. But, whenever heard, the youth of America desert the desk and text book for a vacation and respite from study. School's end is also graduation for many who have completed years of education to reach commencement time and the receipt of a diploma. The graduate is again in line for oratory on the larger life that lies in wait, the future that holds great promise and success. Youngsters view the school year ending as a time for congenial association with fellows, for pleasure and play until next fall when they return to their studies. For the graduate it is the prologue that has ended, the play is about to begin, the drama one of seeking a job to exercise his talents, to find his position on the stage called life.

The diploma is a fine piece of achievement but the diploma is not a marketable product. It may help to start one on a career that will lead to fame and fortune but to tackle the job successfully takes more than the diploma. Cultural training, scholastic background, vocational guidance, are all fine and a step to a goal, but devotion, service and sacrifice come from within the graduate.

Statistics dealing with economic conditions here do not encourage the graduate, to expect easy going in the field of employment. It challenges and warns that jobs are not as plentiful as the job seeker might hope. There will be many applicants in the waiting room. They tell us that prospects are less than last year, with colleges having a record number of graduates. Life's pathway will not be a bed of roses, but for the resolute, unselfish and high-minded young men and women, there will be achievement and a measure of success thru clean hard work.

Decoration Day

• No more will they answer the call to arms . . . no more will they heroic deeds do! For they slumber on amid the clover on American soil . . . the poppy fields of Flanders . . . the terrain of Pacific isles!
