

Easy to Re-Upholster Furniture In Your Own Home with Latex Foam

If your home is faced with the problem of sagging chair seats or worn padding on window seats, stools, or the vanity bench—cheer up! You can re-upholster that old furniture quickly and easily right in your own home, with the new latex foam rubber cushioning. This soft, resilient material, which is being used a great deal in new furniture is available in sheet form at department stores and upholstery supply shops.

One-inch-thick sheets are suitable for padding over covered springs and for cushions for dining room chairs, stools and benches. Thicker latex foam sheets are available if you want to have a deeper padding or reversible cushion.

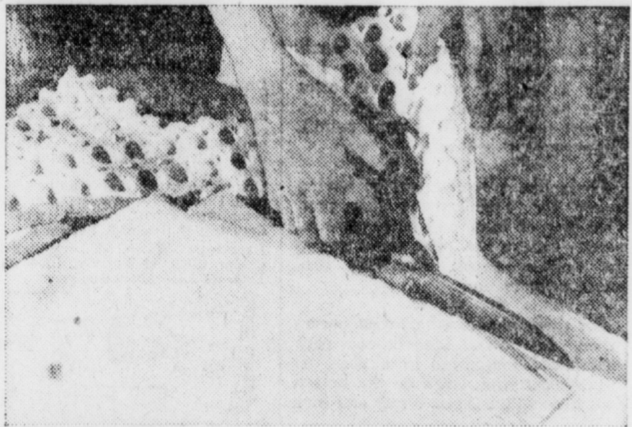

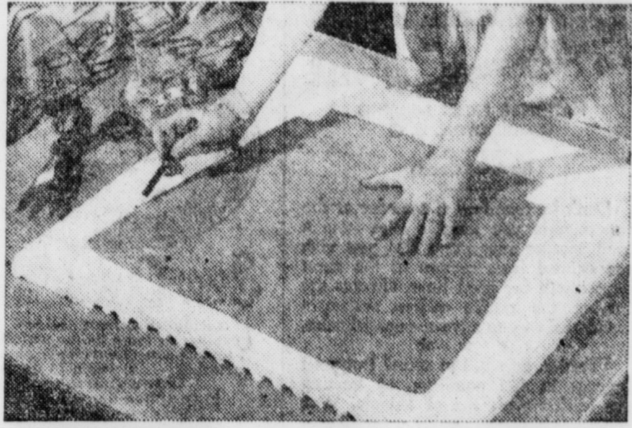

Besides the latex foam, all you need for your re-upholstering job is a pair of large shears, rubber cement (which you buy along with your sheet of latex foam), tacks, hammer, a soft pencil, paper for a pattern, and, of course, your upholstery fabric.

The procedure is simple. First, remove the old fabric and the worn padding. Outline and cut a paper pattern of the seat, allowing an extra quarter of an inch on all sides. With the pencil, trace the pattern on the smooth side of the latex foam and cut it out.

The experts say the seat will have a neater appearance if the padding is cut with a tapered edge on the bottom side.

Next, dot the chair seat with rubber cement and press the latex foam pad in place. Then simply tack your upholstery fabric in place and trim it if you wish. If the fabric is a loose weave or has a slippery surface, upholsterers recommend that a piece of muslin be tacked over the latex foam before the cover fabric is put on.

Thus, in a few minutes, you have converted your old tired chair into a neat-looking, comfortable piece of furniture. What's more, it will keep that smart new look, for latex foam cushioning lasts almost indefinitely—it won't mat or sag or lump. And it won't be damaged by moisture, mold, moths or other pests. If you would like more information about latex foam cushioning, write to the Rubber Development Bureau, Department H, 1631 K Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C., and ask for a free booklet about latex foam.

Live only for today—yesterday is gone and tomorrow is as yet unborn.
