SHORT STORY
Artistic Ancestors
By Richard Hill Wilkinson
"I WISH," said Aime Butterworth wistfully, "I only wish there had been some one in our family who really did something, something while, something—" she smiled as she said it—"I could brag about."
Fred Butterworth laid aside the morning paper, gulped down the last of his coffee, shoved back his chair and said: "What?"
Aime overlooked his rudeness. "The bridge club meets here this afternoon," she said, "and I dread it because Aggie Spencer and Gertrude Wilcox will monopolize the conversation with stories of their ancestors."
Fred scratched his chin and contemplated the wistful look in his wife's eyes. Suddenly he banged the table. "By George, I'd almost forgotten it! Darned if I hadn't. You sit here a minute, sweet, till I rummage around in the attic. I'll give you something to brag about!"
Later he returned with a book. "It's a book of poetry, that's what it is! Written by my mother and published 20 years ago. There's talent in my family, I'll have you know."
Aime's eyes lighted, then she glowed with sudden joy. "Fred! You dear! Is it really? Was your mother really a poet? Oh, why didn't you tell me before! It's just too exciting!"
Fred grinned delightedly. Enroute to the station he began to smile. And by the time he had boarded the 8:15 the smile had developed into an occasional chuckle. Tom Cooke, who usually sat with Fred during the short run to the city, became curious.
"Say, what's eating you this morning? Let a man in on it if you've got something that'll fetch a laugh these dull days."
Fred laughed outright. "I'll tell you, Tom. It's too good to keep. But don't on your life breathe a word. It would kill Aime."
"TOM MADE SOLEMN promises and cocked his ear. "Well," said Fred, "Aime was upset this morning because she didn't have anything to brag about at her bridge club. The other members, it seems, have artistic ancestors. It made Aime feel bad to think she married into such an uninteresting family, so I dug into an old trunk and produced a book of poems that mother published 20 years ago, and told her to brag about that."

MECHANICAL WEED KILLERS
While chemical weed controls are coming into more common use, the rotary hoe, spike harrow, or weeder, are still in general use in cornfields. Extension agronomists of Pa. State College say harrowing knocks weeds out of the row while they are small and keeps the soil surface permeable to the moisture and air.

required, many of the de-tasseller have had years of experience and work with considerable rapidity. During their first season of working they receive the minimum rate of pay, but in the second year they are given more. Those returning for their third year of detasselling frequently become a group leader, a kind of foreman.
Working six hours a day, unless rain disrupts their regular schedule, the de-tassellers have started July 14th and will continue about three weeks.
A clean-up squad consisting of about 20 older boys is employed to clear the fields. Both the Hoffman and Reist firms have such squads and they will work on into August.
40 LESS BARBER SHOPS
87 BEAUTY PARLORS
Lancaster city has 40 less barber shops now than it had 12 years ago. Then there were 106; now there are 66. Forty of these are 1-chair shops.
Since then, however, beauty parlors have multiplied and today there are 87 in the city.
Mount Joy has four barber shops and the same number of beauty parlors.
FARM REPAIR CENTERS
Not much equipment or space are needed to organize a useful farm repair center, says C. H. Bingham, extension agricultural engineer of the Pa. State College. Time spent in sharpening and repairing tools, and in overhauling other equipment will be saved many times over when they are in use during the busy summer season.
