SHORT STORY

Strictly Analytical
By Richard Hill Wilkinson

3-Minute Fiction

"THE TROUBLE with you," Barry said, "is that you're too analytical. Why don't you throw caution to the wind for once and marry the girl?"
Hugh sighed. His face took on that look of faintly aloof indulgence that he always conjured when Barry became critical. "You wouldn't understand," he said.
"You're too impulsive to see what I'm driving at. Let me tell you, it pays to be careful."
"Sure it does. But it doesn't pay to be overly careful. How does Valeria feel about it?"
"How does she feel? How do you think she feels? When a girl's in love she knows enough to be careful herself."
"Meaning, of course, that Val's mad about you and she's willing to wait until you get through analyzing and justify or compensate her shortcomings in your mind."
Hugh gestured indifferently. "Figure it that way, if you like."
"Wouldn't it be a shock to you if you discovered yourself to be wrong. I mean, if Val married someone else right under your nose?"
"She won't," said Hugh confidently. "Girls aren't made that way." He stood up. "I haven't been studying psychology and human behavior five years for nothing."
"But if she gets tired of waiting and marries some one else in the meantime, maybe you'll regret it."
"Don't be ridiculous. Val won't marry anyone else. I know what I'm doing."
Barry let a fortnight elapse before he again broached the subject of Val. It rankled him, and he felt better to get it off his chest. "Hate to mention it again, Hugh, but Val seems to think you've been neglecting her lately. Can't blame her much, either."
"Cut it!" Hugh looked ugly. "I think you'd better let me tend to my own affairs, Barry. The girl loves me and when I get around to it, I'll marry her. Goodness, can't you understand that a man shouldn't jump into such things?"
"Or a woman either!" Barry offered. "I happen to know Val was out with someone else last night."
"Good. Comparing the someone else with me will be the best thing in the world for her—and me too."

"A girl in love knows enough to be careful herself."

Hugh was annoyed. Blast it, why couldn't Barry mind his own business? Why did he always have to keep worrying about Val. It was plain as day that he didn't understand women. Val knew a good thing when she saw it. She loved him and was willing to wait. She was smart.

VAGUELY HE wondered who the other man could be she was out with. It was sort of amusing in a way. Probably Val had merely told Barry that so Barry would tell him. Childish. Why, even a first-year psychology student could tell you that was nothing but a feeble attempt on the part of the female to excite jealousy in the man she loved.

Three evenings later Hugh's phone rang. It was Barry. He sounded far away. "Can't hear you." Hugh yelled into the mouthpiece. "Talk louder."
"I say," came Barry's voice, more distinctly, "that the thing I warned you against has happened."
"What thing?" said Hugh.
"About Val. About her marrying someone else right under your nose. She's done it."
"I don't believe it," said Hugh, feeling for the first time a queer sensation of alarm.
"I saw it happen," said Barry. "I was there."
"Good lord!" Hugh was suddenly very much excited and very concerned.
"You can't say I didn't warn you," Barry's voice said, growing fainter.
"Hey! Hold on a minute, Barry! Are you there? . . . Yes, yes, I know you warned me. Guess I was something of a fool. Who was it she married? This is terrible!"
"Me," said Barry, very faintly. And then the line went dead.

TWO WEEKS BIBLE SCHOOL CLOSED AT CROSS ROADS

A two week Daily Vacation Bible School ended Friday at the Cross Roads Brethren in Christ Church. The Superintendent P. Hess announced an average enrollment of 300 every evening and on Thursday an "open house" was held, at which time the parents toured the class rooms.

Two projects were developed, a home missionary project the first week and a foreign missionary project, the second week. An offering was taken each evening of the first week and went toward a fund for the purchase of a station wagon for the Messiah Orphanage, Florin. The second week, the offering went toward a fund to educate a doctor for missionary work.
