POPULAR FEATURES AT MODERATE COST

Complete with garage and breezeway, this attractive house was designed for The Celotex Corporation by Architect Edward Merks. It achieves beauty and enduring comfort at moderate cost through utilization of the latest developments in building techniques and materials.

The kitchen in the front, with sink under the windows, is a feature decidedly popular today. In this location a busy homemaker has a "look out" and, although the kitchen can not be seen from the front door, it is conveniently near it. The kitchen has ample space for equipment plus a table for family meals or snacks.

The breezeway connecting the garage with the kitchen will be a welcome feature in bad weather. And on hot summer afternoons, it will provide a shaded spot for some moments of cool relaxation.

The living room, with its well-placed picture windows and open fireplace, offers intriguing decorating possibilities. And the 15 foot length of this room provides dining space when entertaining.

Bedrooms are ample and, with the standard size bathroom, are in a section of their own. The house as a whole has that all important "must" -- good storage space.

Working plans for this and other quality homes embodying modern, money saving architectural advances are available through the J. C. Snavely and Sons Inc., Landisville headquarters for all building information on homes at moderate cost.

IMPROVE THE LAWN

Now is the time to finish the work of lawn improvement. Late summer and early fall is the best time to kill weeds, to seed bare spots, to improve the grass and to do needed renovation.

LOW IN COST, HIGH IN LIVABILITY

Designed for streamlined living, this modern ranch-type home combines low cost with a high degree of livability. Note the dual purpose rooms -- the large living room with ample space for dining table at one end; and the kitchen and utility room which are practically one, with the equipment forming a shoulder-high partition. There's a snack bar or breakfast table for informal family meals, and the utility area even has the space for a carpenter's bench for the man of the house.

Comfort and convenience are built into this house -- a homey open fireplace, plenty of windows, lot of closet space, both bedrooms in a section of their own and wash basins in the bedrooms to supplement the facilities of the centrally located bathroom.

This house, designed for The Celotex Corporation by Architects Perkins and Will of Chicago, is one of a series of attractive homes that can be built today at common-sense cost by the family of modest income. It includes such advancements as improved planning to save building time, use of the modern materials which perform two or more functions at a single cost, and use of efficient construction methods which assure the owner that none of his building dollars will be wasted on frills and extravagances.

Working plans for this and the other quality home embodying modern, money saving architectural advances are available through the J. C. Snavely and Sons Inc., Landisville, Pa., headquarters for building information on homes at common sense cost.
