

OWL LAFFS

—BY—
A WISE OWL

Well! It's about time we gave Indian summer back to the Indians. I was pretty well fed up with that sweaty weather. But anyhow, the heat's off now. Temperature's falling, sweaters appearing, and suits and topcoats are being worn with the aroma of the moth balls.

Which reminds me—my favorite muffler is a series of holes held together by threads. The moths used it for a tennis net.

I get so mad at some of these people who insist on outdoing the other person, no matter what. I was so pleased with the success of my wife's reducing exercises that I boasted: "My wife is really getting in shape. Two months ago, she couldn't even see her feet. Now she can lean over and touch them without bending her knees." But my friend (?) outdid me. He said: "That's nothing. This morning my wife touched her chin to the floor without bending her knees." "Boy, that's great. How did she do that?" I inquired politely. And he answered: "She fell out of bed."

A young aspirant for a position on a college football team was presenting his qualifications to his coach, who asked: "Can you run fast?" "Fast? Why, coach I was even born with a runny nose."

Two guys at Chet's bar were discussing the prize fights on the television screen. "I could fight better than that pug," said one guy. "I was a fighter once and traded punches with the best of them. Why in one fight I even lasted two rounds." "That's nothing," said the other guy. "My brother punched Joe Louis right in the nose." "No kidding! Gosh I'd like to shake hands with a guy like that." "Yeah, he was pretty brave," said the second guy. "But we ain't gonna dig him up just to shake hands with you."

It was Tewkerrie's 104th birthday and the reporters were interviewing him. "What would you say is the main reason for your longevity?"

"The reason I have lived so long," Tewkerrie said briskly, "is that I never took a drop of liquor in my whole life."

Just then there was a terrible crash from the next room.

"What's that?" asked the reporters. "Oh, that's my father," Tewkerrie answered. "He always makes a lot of noise when he gets drunk."

Yesterday we received a telephone call. It was a woman calling to place her husband's name in the obituary column. "What was his profession?" the clerk asked.

"Traveling salesman."

"Would you like to say anything personal?" asked the clerk.

"Well, I just found out that he has been carrying on with a woman in Chicago."

"We better not print that," our clerk said. "How long has he been dead?"

"He starts tomorrow," she had replied.

Whataya bet you won't know me next Monday in the Halloween parade? So I wear a funny face all the time. Do you have to be nasty and remind me?
